THE TRAGEDY OF ALBERTVS WALLENSTEIN.

[1640]

THE

TRAGEDY

OF

WALLENSTEIN.

ate Duke of Fridland, and Generall to the Emperor Ferdinand the fecond.

Written by HENRY GLAPTHORNE.

Cedant carminibus reges Regumque triumphi

The Scene, Egers.

And Acted with good Allowance at the Globe on the Banke-fide, by his Majesties Servants.

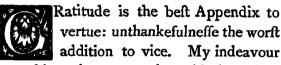

maprinted at London by Tho. Paine, for George Hutton, and are to be fold at his Shop within Turn-stile in Holborne. 1640.

TO THE GREAT EXAMPLE OF VERTVE

Liberall Arts, Mr. WILLIAM MURREY of his Majesties Bed-chamber.

SIR,

to atchieve the one, and avoid the other, invited me to this publication of my many ingagements to your best felse: and betrayd your noble name to the patronage of this Poem. The native magnificence of your disposition is so repleate with mercy,

The Epistle.

that it would bee an errour in the religion of my duty, should I question your remission of this audacious crime, the offence being onely the acknowledgement of my respective service to you. Works of this nature have alwaies assumed this priviledge, to aspire the noblest for their Protectors. Since then authorised by custome, worthiest Sir, it cannot bee a diminution to your same, nor repugnant to the gravity of your most serious imployments to have him by publike profession known your servant, who hath long since by particular devotion been

The humblest of your honorers,

HEN. GLAPTHORNE.

He rumour still continues.

Tert. Yes, my Lord,
Ill fames though quicke are certaine, 'tis concluded

Past question or dispute, for these reports

Are grounded on too manifest a truth,

To carry doubt in them, it is confirm'd this morning;

Hee must resigne

Lefle Though a stranger Sir,
And so lesse interested in the Generalls cause
Then you his Country-man: were you not my friend.

You ly'd to speake it. Must our Generall That soule of valor Wallenstein; who has (Like subtle lightning) purg'd the German ayre, From all the hot infections, forraign warre

Could threaten: fent the health-carousing Dane Drunke with his owne blood home: broke all the force,

With which the valuant Palatine and his aydes Infested had the Province: given to Death (That thunder-bolt of warre) whose very name Was great as Fate it selfe unto his soes, The Swedish King. and must be now, his age Is candid o're with victories, be inforc'd To a base resignation. Death! he's damn'd That dare but mutter it

Gordon. And they were fo
Who first occasion'd it, 'twould bring much comfort

To all true Souldiers.

Lefle. 'Tis concluded Sir,

Past all redemption, they are doubly damn'd

For their ingratitude; displace a man

To whom they owe their lives! one whom, my

Lords,

We have feen i'th heat and bravery of a fight, Cheere up his fainting and disheartned troupes, Even when his body feem'd but all one wound, That it appear'd a little Iland, circled Round with the purple deluge of his blood. Who when warres Quiristers, the big-mouth'd Drums, And furly Trumpet sung his Armies Dirge, That satall Musicke sweld his sprightly sense, More then soft Hymnes at Nuptials.

Tert. Sir, his glories

Are so well knowne to us we need not urge Their reputation, but 'tis past my thoughts, Why on the sudden he should be compeld To give his charge up.

Kintz. When the world beleev'd He should have had a double triumph in The honour of his victories.

Lesle. Ile tell you,

There is in Princes Courts a leane-fac'd monster,

Term'd Envie, raigning in unworthy breafts, To fames Heroicke fonnes, fuch as know to cringe With fubtle motion to their Princes fmiles. Adore his foot-steps and his awfull nods, And can like Aspes instill into his eares, A fweet yet killing venome: these thin soules When the blunt Souldier, has on piles of wounds Built up his Countries peace, whisper Beware In time my Lord, least he doe grow too great: This meeting with the jealous Princes feares, (As Princes still are fearefull of the greatnesse Of rising active subjects) breeds resolves to cut up That prop, leaning on which themselves have stood, Firme and unshaken on their base, and these Court Paralites, and th' Emperors weake distrusts, Puls this diffrace on Fridland, which if he With an effeminate patience doe put up, May all the Lawrels growing on his Creft, Be turn'd to Cypriffe, ferving for no use But to adorne his Funerals.

Gordon Soft,

The Generall's here himfelfe: my gracious Lord The Duke.

Tert. Our thrice redoubted Generall.

Enter Wallenslein, Illawe.

Wallenf. Ha! that found Awakes my drowfie foule, pray good my Lords, What do you behold degenerate in my lookes, Shewing me unworthy full of that great title?

Tert. I would pull my eyes out, Should they convey into my foule a thought Tending to fo much facriledge to honour, And perfect masculine vertue.

Wallenf. Yet I must Put off that glorious title, like a garment, Old and unsit for wearing: O my Lords, Our honours individuall with our foules Growes to that effence, as toth' hand or cheeke The native whitenesse, and to have that torne, Lug'd off by violent torture, is a suffrance Beyond the strength of patience: is't not, Lords i Test. Yes, and looke

How farre the noble immaterial foule, Transcends the duller body, so much torments Inflicted on the purer mind, surpasses Corporeall punishments,

Wallenf. It is a true

Philosophy which even amongst Souldiers,
Whose onely learning is comprized in Armes,
Is granted as indisputable, my Lords,
What will the world that sometimes stood at gaze,
Frighted with awfull terror of my deeds,
Imagine to behold me in my age,
Deprived of all those titles, all those glories,
Which have growne up with me even from my youth,

Which I have purchaf'd with expence of wounds,

More numerous, then I've veynes; 'twill straight conclude.

Enther my age is doting, and return'd Into a fecond childhood, and unfit to manage The glorious warfare and the big commands Of Martiall discipline, or that my faith, Is on the fudden like a faire ripe fruit, (By'th too hot kisses oth' lascivious Sunne Betray'd to rottennesse) by haughtie pride, Or vaine ambition tainted.

Lefle And so blast
At least, my Lord, in their too nice esteeme,
Your former actions.

Gordon. Wrap in clouds of shame, Your shining vertues

Wallenf. True, for 'twixt these two extremes, There is no meanes t'escape by . thinke then Lords, What an inhumane, irreligious wrong

It is, both to my honour and my faith, To be deprived thus basely of that charge, Which I've perform'd with care and good fuccesse: And what ingratitude 'tis in this Prince, This Emperor, thus to reward my truft, When his owne foule can witnesse, 'twas my selfe That from the Swede, the Palatine and Dane, Rescued his Eagles; who else had mewd their plumes.

And from their height been forc'd to perch on earth. I tooke the recling pillars of his State, And pitcht them firme and even Of this his Heaven.

I've been the Atlas, I did fight for him, When every conflict was a victory, Each field of battell was a field of glory; Yet as my truths and loyalties reward, I am depriv'd unkindly even in peace, Of all my glones purchas'd in the warre.

Tert Next Sir, thinke, With whom your flining honour's in the scale Ballanc'd, with one fo farre beneath your worth, We are ingag'd in reputation, never (He being so farre inferior to our selves)

To obey his commands.

Kintz Mathias Gallas. Your late-Field-Marshall

Wallenf His very name Begets new horror in me, nobleft friends, Co-partners with me in what ever dangers, Attends triumphant war, whom I have led In crimfon fields through rifing feas of blood, That you have fwom, not march'd to victory. Would it not breed afflictions in your foules, Your noble honest soules, to see your poore, Yet alwayes loving Generall, at this age, Now when his head's grown white beneath his helme, Discarded from his office, and shooke off, As birds their feathers mew, or Stags their hornes,

Those uselesse excrements, in hope that fresher Will ith' oldplaces grow, should I doe this, I then Might trayle my waving Ensignes in the dust, As at my Honors Funerall, and breake My Sword 'gainst my owne Target, nay put off All pompe and pride of war, and like that vaine Resemblance of a star, a Comet fall By my owne fire consum'd to earth forgotten.

Lefle Great Sir, though a stranger to you By birth and nation, yet the strict alliance I've to your princely noblenesse, injoynes me Under your pardon, and with the allowance Of these brave Counts, your followers, to deliver My zealous counsell to you.

Wallenf. Noble Scot, Use your discretion freely.

Leste Thus great Sir then,

Though't be i'th power of Princes to prescribe

Lawes to their subjects, 'tis their subjects wills

Must put those Lawes in act, 'tis their obedience,

Which are the ablest sinewes of the state,

And 'twere a barbarous cruelty to imploy

Their hands against themselves, a strange instice.

To make their proper vertue instrument
Of their owne ruine

Tert. Colonell Lesle

Speakes home.

Kint. And to much purpose Lesse. Doe not Lords

Misunderstand my meaning, I speake not this, That I contemne authority, or dislike Order in every thing, without preeminence In title of command our trade the warfare Could not subsist, but to informe our Generall, Our too much injur'd Generall, that it is No such strange crime, to disobey a Prince In things injust; and can there be a greater, Or shamefuller injustice then for Casar, By's Mandate to inforce him to religne His glorious charge up?

Gordon. 'Twere a shame.

Illawe. An utter, an abominable difgrace
To all that honor vertue, should we suffer it?

Lesse. Here then

Ends what I would have uttered; of what force Are Cafars. Mandats, when their reall loves Has difannull'd them? circled with these hearts, These bulwarkes of brave hearts, what need have

To acknowledge any Emperor but your felfe and Your felfe great Duke, whole ment lays just claime To that supremest title

Lesle. Pray once more,

Give me your patience Rashnesse, Gentlemen, Gives the first on-set siercely, then recoyles, As Waspes when they have lost their stings:

As Waipes when they have lott their ftings : affaires

Of this high confequence, doe require mature

Deliberation to confirme our owne

Strength for the exploit, 'twere fit we did conjoyne

With Saxon Waymar and Gustavus Horne, And the other bold confederates. how likes Your Grace this project?

Wallenf. The Drum and Fife,

Trumpet and Canon, when their lowd voyces fing.

Its to victory, could nere beget
More musick in my ravished sense: best friend,
I am so bankrupt growne in my extent
Of gratitude, that trust me I could weepe,
To see my selse so farre outdone in friendship;
I am ingag'd in honour to goe on,
That this insulting Emperor by his fall,
To gaine sit meanes to gratise your loves.
Thou aery name of loyalty, hence to heaven,

And finde like imoake a buriall in the clouds.

Thus I expire thy effence; henceforth Ile acknowledge

No other Emperor but these worthes hearts.

Tert. And we (great Duke) henceforth will nere fubrut.

To any rule but yours, which to confirme As fure as Fate had feal'd it, on your fword Wee'l take a folemne and religious oath For the performance.

Omnes, we all sweare it

And if any should be so basely perjur'd, as to breake,
But in a thought this Sacramentall faith,
Let our just angers fall as heavie on him,
As heavens most horrid curses, sinke his name,
Like some produce despis'd by light, into forget-

fulnesse

Wallenf So now me thinkes I stand like a

Colustus.

Through whose spaceous Arch,
Flowes the vast sea of honour, without power,
Or naturall force to ebbe Againe, best friends,
The early day, though from the gorgeous East
She breakes, adorn'd with chaines of liquid pearle,

Cannot atchieve full lustre, till the Sun Gild her pale cheekes with brightnesse, nor can we Cloathe the yet infant dawning of our hopes, In persect Robes of light, till we have Attir'd them in the sparkling rayes of blood, Imperial blood. Come let's goe on resolv'd, Like those brave men, who in their awfull palmes, Doe beare about their destinies, and can Command even sate it self. Illawe dispatch with speed

Advises to the Marquesse Brandenburge, Waymar and Count de Arham, that we intreat, At personall meeting with them all at Dresden, Come Lords, when ere the Romane Eagle falls, Wee'l mourne in triumph at her Funeralls.

Exit Wallenf. Tert. Kıntz. et azteri.

Lefte. So things once well begun,
Are halfe perform'd, the managing an act
With close and hidden practice 'mongst the wise
And politicke people, brings affur'd successe:
Broad open wayes the heavie snalle does take,
While untrod paths best please the subtle snake. Exit.

Scena secunda, Emperor, Gallas, Questenberg.

Emp. Hee'l not refigne then? Quest. 'Tis so fear'd, the greatnesse Of his vast spirit never will admit Resignation of those honours, which He has with such selectly injoy'd.

Gallas. Befides, my Lord,
The Army is fo much bewitch'd with love
Of this Arch-Traytor Wallenslein, they rather Put of their due allegeance unto you
Their naturall Soveraigne, nay give up their lives,
Then yeeld to any act which may concerne
His removall

Emper. Can this be possible!
Treason shall never brave us at our doores,
Whilst I can wield a Sword ingratefull slave!
Whom I have rais'd from such an abject lownesse:
His family did scarcely beare a name
In common Gentry, to the very height,
The type of honour. That he should doe this,
And like the Vipers young, devoure that heart,
That bred and noursh'd him, more afflicts my foule.

Than all the wrongs and troubles which my foes Ever inflicted on my Fame and Empire.

Matthias Gallas, let it be your charge,
To fee new forces levy'd, to oppose
Against this Arch-Rebell.

Gallas. My Lord, I've learn'd

Ith' practicke Schoole of warre, that to oppose

Fresh unexperienc'd troups against the flower Of old and hardned Souldrers, is but as If amongst hungry Lions we should cast, Resistlesse infants, and by their weake force, Hope to o'recome the furious beasts. Dread Sir, My Councell alwayes has had that successe, To be accounted faithfull to my Prince. Feare it not, follow then my poore advice, Meet trechery with policie, and try, If you the Ambitious traytor can surprize, The head once off, the weake and fainting limbes, Like fear'd dri'd boughs, by an impetuous wind, Torne from an aged Oke, will fall to earth, And be consum'd to ashes.

Empe. It shall be so,
Lord Questenberg, with all convenient speed,
Dispatch a trusty messenger unto
The King of Hungary, command his presence,
With his most able legions for the safeguard
Of our owne person. In such like affaires,
Which doe concerne the uncertaine rule of States,
Wise men should alwayes be above their sates.

Excunt.

Scena tertia, Albertus, Newman.

Newm. A pox upon her fir, and for her fake, On all good faces; must you figh and whine, And make a face worse then a zealous drunkard Does o're dead mustie wine, because she is beauteous:

We Souldiers doe not use to ingender with A phisnomy, nor as the learned terme it, Co-habit with a handsome nose or lip, There are some parts beneath the waste I take it, More useful for a man of Armes.

Alber. Good Colonell,

No more of this.

Newm. Should I aske you
The reason why you love her, you must answer;
'Tis for the sport (as for what other reason

Women were made, unlesse to prick upon A clout, or starch, transcends my best Philosophy)

And for that purpose, a short coat frister,

That as she milkes each morning,

Bedewes the coole graffe with her Virgin moisture,

As usefull is and active (sounder far

That's certaine granted) pray, my Lord, remember Shee's but your mothers Gentlewoman, and whom perhaps

The Butler has oftener folded up, then ere He did his table linen.

Alber. No more, you'l anger me.

Newm. You'l anger me agen then: we Imps of Mars.

Should know no other mistresses, then what the Camp contains.

I nere durst love ith' field (marry in the Citie

I've had copulation with all trades) but one poore futlers wife, &

She as faire too, as was the kettle which she boyl'd her beefe in.

O how the sweet smell of her amber greace And kitchin-stuffe persum'd my greedy nostrils,

Yet on this beauty doted I (infpir'd by infurrection of the flesh)

And gave her to cuckol'd the good corporall her hus-

Int. Ifabella.

Ten comely dollers, and the divell take her, she paid me with a pox. But see, here comes the Lady of the Lake, for whom you good fir Lancelot make these lamentations; be not you bashfull now, but fall on boldly heart, let me drill her for you, if her body be under Musket proofe, 'tis ten to one my morris pike shall enter to her, to her.

Exit. Newm.

Ifabel. Surpriz'd by him alone, O my just feares.

Albert. Why, cruell faire one, should you shun his fight.

Whose very soule moves in your eyes, or why Should your blest voyce, speake health to all the world.

Yet threaten death to me: look on my youth, My hopefull youth, which in the active war, Has taught old Souldiers discipline: behold it Nipt by the cold frost of your icie beauty, As in a feaver languishing to nothing, Forgetfull of the noble pride and strength, It has so lately boasted, 'tis injust To see me still over my foes victorious, Made by my selfe your captive, to insult Over your suppliant vassale, would those eyes, Which can contract lights orbe into a glance,

Become impoverish'd by a smile, those cheekes Sully their native tincture, should they blush At your mindes cruelty, 'twould rather adde To the illustrious excellence.

Ifabel. My noble Lord.

Albert. Stay, you must not speake yet,
There's not an accent issuing from your lips,
But has the power, should thunder speak, to charme
To peacefull quiet the affrighted world,
And would strike dumbe my passion: best of

Virgins

There is not that disparity 'twixt our births,
As there's inequall difference 'twixt our hearts,
Mine's all on fire, dare combat with the Sun
For heats priority, yours Mountaine snow,
Cold as the north, and cruell as my fortunes:
Yet you may make them equall as your eyes are.

By yeelding up that fort, which will, when time Has given it ceremonious priviledge, be perhaps By some unworthy groome, without resistance

Surpriz'd and entred.

Ifabel. My Lord, bad custome is become
In men a second nature to deceive
Poore Virgins by their flatteries; noble youth,
That I doe love you dearely, may these teares,
Shed for your folly testise: looke backe
Into your pricelesse honour, call that up
To affish the fortresse of your minde affail'd
By soule unlawfull passion: thinke how base 'tis,
To rob a silly Orphan of her dowry;
I have no other but my Virgin whitenesse,
Lest to uphold my same, nought but my vertue
To my inheritance; should you disposle me
Of that saire portion by your lust, my memory,
Would like an early Rose bud by that tempest,
Dye on its owne stalke blasted.

Albert. I doe dreame fure. Ifabel. Womens fames fir,

Are like thin Chrystall glasses, by a breath Blowne into excellent forme, and by a touch, Crackt or quite broken: fay I should consent To your desires, your appetite once sated, You would repent the sact, when you should see Your selfe surrounded in a mist of cares, View bashfull Virgins point at you, as at Some hateful produgie; heare matrons cry, There goes the lustfull thiese, that glories in The spoyle of innocent Virgins, that soule thiese, That has a hundred eyes to let lust in at, As many tongues to give his wild thoughts utterance.

Albert. Sure some Angell inhabits here,

This cannot be a Mansion

For mortall frailty: fweet farewell, good night, I would not have my over fawcie love,

Commit a rude intrusion on thy peace,

Though parting with thee be more torment to me.

Then to forgoe mine eyes, may all the joyes Of healthfull flumbers crowne thy bed, thy dreames Be free from paraphrafing on my memory, Left it affright you once more Deare good

Lest it affright you, once more, Deare, good night.

While you with pleafing happy fleeps are bleft, I'le feeke fome way to my eternall reft.

Exeunt.

Explicit Actus primus.

Actus fecundus: Scena prima.

Wallenstein, Waymar, Brandenburge, Tertzki, Kintzki, 1Uawe, Newman, Gordon, Leste, Butler.

Wallenf. The honour you have done me mighty Princes.

Electors of the facred Romane Empire,
By this your personal visit does ingage
So much our gratitude, that what our selves,
And the most able forces of our friends,
Can in requitall act, shall be perform'd.
Mutuall discourses often mingle soules,
And as the Arteries convey the blood
Throughout the body, they from mind to mind
Convey affection: to this end we did
Intreat this meeting, that our conference might
Joyne in an individual league our hearts.

Bran. This happy treaty, glorious Duke, shall bring

Bleft peace once more with turtles wings, to foare Over the German Provinces; shall dry Teares from the eyes of mothers, while the Virgins Shall dedicate their houres to joyfull Hymnes, In honour of your ment.

Wam. The sturdy boore
Shall plough his fields in fasety, and ascribe
To you, great Duke, that happinesse: 'twas you,
Who when Bellona thundred through the land,
Did stop the steel-wing'd Goddesse in her course,
Who when our Armies, like a raging sloud,
Did beare downe all before them, did oppose,

The greedy torrent, boldly turn'd it backe,
Into its native body, and conjoyn'd
With you fo inur'd to conquest, he were lesse
Then man, and more then coward, that could feare

Any infuing dangers.

Wall. You doe me too much honor, mighty Princes:

And now my brave confederates in Armes,
Where businesse of import commands attendance,
That time's mis-spent, that's spent in uselesse words,
I shall so please you, therefore speake the cause,
(In briefe) which urg'd me to desire this conference,

And give you reasons for my strange revolt, From my so long lov'd Master.

Bran 'Twas the end We onely came for.

Waym. The fole reason

That drew us to this meeting. Wallenf. Thus in briefe then, How I have ferv'd this Emperour, these wounds That beautifie my body (cause the markes Of my just loyalty) given by your swords, Can beare me righteous witnesse; but good service To a malicious and ingratefull Prince. Are rather causes of suspect, then love. And when mens actions doe transcend reward. They then defend to punishment (my cause Is rightly flated thus) for when my felfe, (I well may speake it without partiall boast) Had like his Eagle in my powerfull gripe, Snatch'd up his Crowne that lay despis'd on earth, And heav'd it up to Heaven, borne all the waight, Which yours, the Danish and the Swedish force, Could load these shoulders with; nay shooke it off Lightly, as windes in Autumne doe from trees. Their wither'd Summer garments: then, even then, When my just hopes were pregnant with conceit

Of Wreathes and triumphes (as a brave reward)
My Souldiers by his Mandates were forbid,
To obey me as their Generall, and my felfe
Commanded straightway to resigne my charge,
All my great power which I had bought with blood.

Unto Matthias Gallas my Field-Marshall.

Saxon. Insufferable injury!

Bran. Inhumane and unhear'd of ingratitude!

Wallen. Nay more,

As I had been a Traytor then in fact,
He did endevour my furprize, to bring me
A prisoner to Vienna: thinke then Lords,
When both my pricelesse honour and my life
Were at one stake propos'd, if I'de not cause
To play my game with cunning skill, when these
My brave Commanders from their martiall eyes,
Did for my wrongs shed teares of blood, cal'd on me.

As on their friend, their father, not to leave My Sons my Souldiers: if I their request Perform'd, I fav'd my honour and my life, But if the Emperors, I gave up them both To plaine perspicuous ruine: vet in not Accomplishing my Masters harsh commands. The name of treason brands me (but passe that.) I of two evils chose to take the least, Rather to draw upon me Cæfars hate. Then to forfake my charge and fouldiers loves: And now being free in my owne foule as thought Unfought to (Lords) and unconstrain'd, I offer T'assist against this Emperor (this thing Made onely up of name and voyce) whom we Will breake as showers doe bubles, which themfelves

Of nothing had created.

Saxon. So welcome

Is this your proffer'd amity, no bleffing

Heaven in its fullest bounty could have showr'd

Could have arriv'd more pleasing, and to shew How much we prize your friendship, let your son, Young Fredericke be affianc'd to my daughter, The tye of nature to the tye of blood, Will make the union perfect.

Wallenf. 'This an honour.

We are bound in duty to accept, my Lords,
In noble foules no thought should once admit
Sullen delay, our progresse should be swift,
As is the passage of unlimited fire
In populous Cities; or as windes, whose force
Does at their birth rend ope the stubborne wombe
Of the dull earth their mother, great designes
Should by great spirits onely be pursu'd,
And our last businesse is our speedy conference
With Chancellor Oxensern, and the French Embassador.

Actions that carry an unusuall weight, Ought still to flye at an unusuall height.

Exeunt Wallenf. Bran. Waym. Tert. Kint. Illaw.

Leste. So, let the dull Halfe-spirited soules, who strive on reremice wings, By that which fooles terme honesty, to climbe Toth' top of honour, in their filly vertue Boaft, while ingenious and more active foirits. In a direct line without stop or hindrance, Mount to their wishes, yet ith' worlds esteeme, Are held as reall, and indu'd with goodnesse. This Wallenstein, like a good easie Mule, Have I led on byth' nose to this rebellion, Fir'd with fuch venome as will foread, Like fwift infection through his foule: thefe two Shall be my agents to atchieve my ends. Factors in cunning to vent forth my intentions, Lieutenant Colonel Gordon, and my good Captaine Butler.

Gordon. We were musing,

What ferious thought it was, that could fo long Detaine you from our conference.

Leste. Faith I was studying

On our great Generals fortunes, upon which Our hopes and lives depend; what thinke you of them?

Gordon. Well at least, wee'r bound To hope the best, he's in himselfe so mighty, He seemes above his sate.

Butler. His plots doe carry A faire and specious out side.

Leste. 'Tis a signe.

Corruption is within them, noble friends,
You are my country-men, and if my life
'May preferve yours from ruine, I shall deem it
Religiously imploy'd. if you discover
What I intend to utter, 'twill but fend
My age some houres before its destin'd minute,
Unto my grave, and I most willingly,
Shall dye the causes martyr.

Gordon. By our honours, No fyllable shall ever passe our lips, What you in love reveale to us.

Lefle. Thus then friends,
Rebellion never yet could boaft a happy
Or profperous period, Wallensteins designes
Are built on fand, and with the Emperours breath

Will be disperst into the ayre: I speak not this, That I doe hate the man, heavens know I love His person, but detest the cause he justifies.

Gord. True, the dignity of Princes, Does make what ever quarrels subjects raise Against their Soveraigns, odious.

Leste. Shall we then,
Here in a stranger country, violate
The Lawes of hospitality, unmake the ancient faith

Afcrib'd unto our Nation, by affifting A Traytor 'gainst his lawfull Prince, a Generall Against that power which gave him that command.

Betray that royall Master, to whose bounty We owe our lives: first rather let's resolve, To open all his treasons, his proceedings, Unto our Lord the Emperour.

Gord. 'Tis very just, And in my, judgement requisite.

Butler. I doe approve it.
Leste. 'Twere meere madnesse,

And he that does missive it, beares no braine, No foule about him: Instead of sight preferment.

Which (fhould our Generall prosper) we at best, Could but expect, we shall have Castles, Lordships, Earledomes, nay Provinces, be stil'd the savers, Preservers of the Empire, have our names, As 'twere in triumph sung about the streets, In popular acclamations, thinke then friends, How farre these certains honours will surpasse Our aery expectations: come lets post Straight to Vienna, and informe the Emperour Of all's proceedings, in this great affaire,

We must not use our fortune, but our care.

Exeunt.

Scena secunda, Frederick, Albertus, Newman.

Newm. Pish, perish still in ignorance, am I, Who am grand master in the art of Love, Not able to instruct a limber youth Of the first growth, your brother here makes love In an ill favor'd tone, and skrewes his countenance.

As he were finging of lamentable Ballads
Of Tillies overthrow, but you for your part,
(I've knowne you of an urchin) are fo fiery,
You fpeake all fquibs and crackers, carry a Canon
In your mouth, you'l fright the Lady, she'l imagine
You come to ravish her.

Albert. The Colonell

Tells you, your owne, good brother.

New. I've told you yours too, or I'm much mistaken.

You love, 'tshould seeme, the faire Emilia, A pretty wench, they say, but that's no matter, Your fathers are agreed on't, and you'd have me Shew you the readiest way, how to accost her Negatively, I will demonstrate instantly.

Fred. I shall observe your docume most exactly.

Newm. Pray observe, You must not then accost her with a shrug, As you were lowzie, with your Lady, sweet Lady,

Or most super-excellent Lady, Nor in the Spanish garbe, with a state face, As you had new been eating of a Raddish, And meant to swallow her for mutton to't: Nor let your words, as that I'm most afraid of, ('Cause 'tis your naturall mood) come rumbling forth,

Usher'd with a good full-mouth'd oath, I love you:
But speake the language of an overcomming Lover;
I doe not meane that strange pedanticke phrase,
Us'd by some gallants, who doe aime at wit,
And make themselves starke asses by't, praise their mistresses

By th' Sun and stars, while the poore girles imagine, They meane their fignes, their Mercers or Perfumers

Inhabit at (for fure beyond those Planets They've studied no Astrologie) but you must
In gentle, free, and genuine phrase deliver
Your true affection, praise her eye, her lip,
Her nose, her cheeke, her chin, her neck, her brest.

Her hand, her foot, her leg, her every thing, And leave your rofes and your lillies for Your country froes, to make nofegayes of: But flay, here comes your Mistris, her father too, In conference; fall on my Mumidon, While we retreat.

Int. Waymar, Emilia.

Alber. Speed your endevors, brother.

Ex. Newm. Alber,

Waym. 'Tis fo concluded 'twixt me and his father,

For both our goods, be not you nice Emilia, The noble youth's fo furnish'd with all worth, You needs must like him.

Emilia. Good fir give me license, To let my eye direct my heart to love, And if young Fredericke be the master of Such absolute gifts, doubt not but I shall find them.

Waym. My Lord I'm glad
Of this faire interview, I and my daughter
Were even conferring of you; fir as yet
She's fomething timorous, dreads a Souldiers lookes.

Fred She needs not fir.

She beares a spell about her that would charme A Scythians native fiercenesse into softnesse, Those spirit-breathing eyes, my Lord, which can Kill as they please, or quicken with a glance.

Waym. Now they are enter'd, Ile steale away and leave them.

Fred. Gentle Lady,

To make the addresses of my love-sicke heart, Plaine and apparent to you, that you may, Search through my soule, and find it all your creature.

Give me your patient hearing. Emil. 'Tis a request,

Might tax my manners, should I deny it to One of your noble quality; use your pleasure.

Fred Which confifts

In viewing your bright beauty; the idea
Of all perfections, which the jealous heavens
Durft ever lend to earth-divineft Lady,
The gentle ayre which circumfcribes your cheeke,
Leaving its panting kiffes on the flowres,
That in that Tempe bloffome, does not love
Those fields of purity more then mine eyes do,
Mine, Lady, is a holy,

An intellectuall zeale, such as the Angels And Saints, who know no sexes do affect by, Past imitation too, should they who strive To trace me, take the constancy of Swans, Or never-changing Turtles, as their patternes.

Emilia. Sir, it seemes

You've studied complement as well as Armes, But he's a foolish Lover, who to gaine His Mistris, dare not promise what you have utter'd, but I must

Have more then verball assurance of your love.

Fred. By your faire selfe I'm reall, do intend,
What I've deliver'd with as much true zeale,
As Anchorits do their prayers: I love your minde,
Your excellent minde, and for its sake, the pure
Shrine, which containes that blessing, this sair building,

This pallace of all happinesse, and intreat you, As you have mercy in you, to take pitty
Upon my loves stern sufferings, and redresse them,
By your consent to take me for your husband.

Emilia. Sir you are an over-hasty Lover, to imagine

I can at first fight of your person, be

Surpriz'd and yeeld, they must be strong allurements,

Must tempt a bashfull Virgin still inur'd To no companion but her seares and blushes, To give her heart away, and live in thraldome, Unto a stranger.

Fred. Love, Madam, has Eagles eyes; it can beget acquaintance,

Even in a moment, suddenly as time,
The time that does succeed it. Farewell.

I will not have my over-hasty zeale,
Urge your mild sufferance further, pray think on me

As one who've plaid my full extent of bliffe, In your injoying, think you are the land wracke, By which the brittle vessell of my hopes, Must through Loves-swelling Ocean be directed, To a safe harbor, honour me to kisse

Your faire hand: Lady now farewell, no bliffe Can be in Love, till we know what it is.

Scena tertia.

Ferdinand, King of Hungary, Gallas, Questenberge.

Emper. Crownes are perpetuall cares, and to their heads,

That we are the wreath Imperiall, are annext. Forraigne invasions oft may shake a state, But civil broyles are the impetuous fire-brands, That burne up Common-wealths; to quench A stame domesticke we are met, which will Like stame increase, by going on; this late Revolt of Wallenstein.

Hungar. Perfidious flave!
On whom your plenteous bounties showr'd fo fast,
They seem'd to drown him, he whose great commands.

Could not know ought above them, but your felfe.

The Generall of your forces of Gloyawe, Mechlenburg, Sagan, Fridland, stil'd the Duke, He to invert your owne Armes 'gainst your selfe Swels my vext soule to thinke on 't,

Emper. 'Tis not words,
Or aery threatnings will appeale the mischiefe,
It must be done by force, Matthias Gallas,
Have you according to our late commands,
Given order for the levying new forces,
To oppose this Traytor.

Matth. Mighty Sir, I have, And feen them muftred.

Emp. To what amounts their number.

Gall. Threefcore thousand.

Hung. A royall Armie had they been train'd

In Military discipline, experience

Is halfe the soule of Armes, we will take order,

To have them taught the exercise of Armes,

By those Hungarians troupes which we brought hither.

Int. a meffenger

Emp. Now fir, your businesse.

Messen. Mighty fir,
The Governor of Egers, Colonell Gordon,
Attended by Lieutenant Colonell Butler,
And Colonell Lesse doe desire admittance
Into your presence.

Emp. Let them enter,
They are his friends, and may perhaps discover

Int. Lefle, Goraon, Butler.

Some of his trecheries: Noble ftrangers welcome,

I doe conceive 'tis businesse of importance Has drawne you hither, in Colonell Lesles lookes I read affaires of consequence, with which His active braine does teeme, and faine would be By's tongue deliver'd.

Lefle. Most mighty Cafar,
To indeare the service to you, I shall doe you,
By guilding o're each circumstance, its waight
And consequence, since 'tis 'ny bounden duty,
To you, my royall Master, would but shew,
Pride and arrogant love in me the author,
To my owne act, and so 'twould rather lessen

Then amplifie my merit; how I've ferv'd you Under command of him, whom in due justice I cannot mention now without foule curses, Revolted Wallenslein is to these Lords, And your great selfe best knowne.

Emp. And our rewards Shall strive to pay those services.

Leste. But when I saw him
Put off his faith, abandon his allegeance,
Accounting all your bounteous favors trifles,
Unto the mountainous pile of his deservings,
And like a black cloud hung o're all your Empire,
Uncertaine where to break and in 's vast thoughts,
Aspir'd your facred dignity and life,
I like his Genius skrewd into his counsels,
Explor'd his plots and treasons, and have found them

So full of eminent danger.

Gordon. So malicious.

Lefle. Empty of worth and honour, it had been A finne beyond the horridst punishments, To have conceal'd them from you, and which most Tortures my loyall thoughts, as 't had not been Sufficient for him to rebell himselfe, He has form'd a league desensive and offensive, With your most eager enemies, Saxon Waymar, Brandenburg, Arham, and Gustavus Horne, And had a personall meeting for that purpose.

Butler. And 'tis to be fear'd.

That if sudden power stop not their progresse They will with speedy violence invade you, Heere in your capitall City.

Emper. Worthy strangers, In this one act you've showne your selfe more faithfull.

Then all my home-borne subjects, but be sure If gratitude can equall your deserts, You shall injoy that amply: Noble Lesle, The time is come now, and the delemma cast, Albertus Wallenstein.

That must conclude our Empire, which we must Unto thy care commit: to kill a Traytor. Is a deferving action, for thou firsk'ft Then with the Sword of Justice: wilt thou adde This one act to thy former high defervings. Kill this Arch-Rebell.

Lefle. 'Twas an office. We should have beg'd, beleev't he's dead already. Ile kill him in his pride, in all his glories. With fuch fecurity, as I would fleepe After a tedious watching.

Ember. And expect. What e're your hopes can wish, so with all speed Back to your charge, be carefull, come my Lords. Fate now does fmile upon us, and the storme Which threatned us, is fuddenly growne calme.

Exeunt, Emp. Hung. Ouefl. Gallas.

Leste. Now our hopes May reft, best friends, assur'd of good successe, 'Tis in our hands, our fates, and we have hearts, Dare venter on this Giant Duke, and lift him With as much ease from earth, as the bright Sun Does dull and lazie vapors, nor let dangers Fright us from the atchievement, fince the justice. The cause does carry, is a certaine armour, 'Gainst all the assaults of perill, which in it selfe Is but an April storme, no sooner showne To fright the ayre, but by th' next wind o're-blown.

Explicit Actus secundus.

Actus tertius: Scena prima.

Fredericke, Emilia.

Fred. Divinest Lady,
I hope your late refusall of my love,
Is alter'd now by your more gentle pitty,
My constancie carries more strength about it,
Then to be blasted with your first repulse,
In the same righteous cause of my affection
I must again be advocate, and hope
My sute will be effected.

Emilia. Alas, my Lord,
Make me not thus the subject of your mirth,
Or Complement, your soule is too secure
In its owne manly vertues from surprize
Of weake affection, especially of mine
Who am so worthlesse in my selfe, I cannot Boast those high glories, as to be victorious
Over so brave a Conquerour.

Fred. Those bright eyes, Like Heavens blest light, when from a mist of

He peepes, and gilds the earth with brightnesse, can

Quicken and fire even marble hearts with love, Thaw foules of ice, my Emilia, A malefactors feares are more upon him, E're he doe come to's triall, then when he heares The Judge pronounce the fentence of his death: 'Tis fo with me, and I should be more blest, To heare that voyce of yours,

That Angels voyce (too fweet for fuch dire use) With a severe resusall strike me dead, Then live tormented in a sad suspence, Ignorant of my destiny.

Emilia. My Lord,

If I should frame my Virgin thoughts to love,

They should be fixt on you, but I'm so well

They should be fixt on you, but I'm so well Content, and setled in a Virgin life, I cannot wish to change it.

Fre. Not to imbrace

A larger stock of happines, Emilia.

Virginity is but a fingle good,

A happinesse which like a misers wealth,

Is as from others, so from your owne use,

Lock'd up and closely cabin'd, since it not admits

Communication of its good, when you

Shall in the state of marriage freely taste

Natures choice pleasures, that same happinesse

You were created for.

Emil. You have prevail'd Sir;
You who are still victorious o're your foes,
Must needs remaine a Conqueror o're your friends.
My Lord, receive me freely, I am yours
For ever.

Fred. This chafte kiffe shall seale the contract. Come my Emilia. love is such a wealth, As must be gain'd by free consent, not stealth.

Scena fecunda.

Wallenstein, Dutchesse, Newman, Terzki, Kıntzki, Illawe.

Wallenf. Are they agreed yet, Newman. Newm. Faith my Lord,

The Virgin Lady's fomething fearefull, feares A man of warre should board her, lest his charge Should make her keele split, my Lord Fredricke Is of that rough demeanour, spight of my Instructions, he will never learne to woe

In the due phrase and garbe.

Wallenf I doe admire,
The fond base carriage of our giddy youth
In love affaires, and grieve to see my sonnes,
(Who should inherit from me my great spirit,
As well as fortune) so degenerate from
My masculine courage; when ith' blooming pride
Of my green youth I slourish'd, my desires
Aym'd alwayes rather in the tented field
To spend my houres, then on a downy Couch,
To see the face of a sterne enemy besmear'd, with blood.

Pleas'd me farre better then a Ladies lookes.

Dutch. And yet you vow'd,

E're you won me, my Lord, you ne're faw object, That fo much pleas'd your appetite.

Wallenf. Perhaps I might,

For the obtaining of my ends, descend From my great spirit so much, as to decline To idle Courtship, the birds and beasts will doe it To fate their appetites, the fiery Steed, (That in the fervor of a fight, oft times Neighs courage to his rider) when provok'd With eager heat, will licke and bite his female Into the fame defire: The Sparrowes bill, And with a chirping rhetoricke, feeme to court Enjoyment of their wishes, which fulfil'd Dull as their heads, they couch beneath their wings, And in a slumber, forfeit all remembrance Of their past pleasures: Yet insatiate man, In his defire more hot then Steeds or Sparrowes, Will to obtaine it, quite devest his soule Of all that's masculine in him, and transforme His very being into woman.

Newm. Sure.

My Lord intends to write fome Proclamation.
'Gainst wearing holland smockes, some surious Edict
'Gainst charitable leaguerers: I've knowne him,
(And so have you my Lords) for all this heat
'Gainst woman-hood, pursue a sutlers froe,
(And she had but one eye neither, with as much zeale.

As e're knight-errand did his faire Lindabrides, Or Claudiana.

Ent. Fredrick, Emilia.

Tert. My Lord, your fon and faire Emilia.

Newm. The quarrel's reconcil'd, Ile lay my life on 't.

Wallenf. Beauteous Lady,

The contract 'twixt me and your father, touching
The marriage 'twixt my fon and your faire felfe, I hope

By your consent is ratified: my boy Lookes sprightly, as if he were new return'd From a triumphant victory. Fred. My Lord,
I am fo much a master of my wishes,
By being blest in this faire Ladies love,
I cannot wish a happinesse above
What I possesse, onely would you be pleas'd,
To destiny the most welcome houre for
The consummation of our Nuptials.
Wallens. 'Tshall be accomplish'd
With all the speed that preparations can
Be made for the solemnity. Your newes sir.

Int. Page.

Page. 'My Lord, there's Colonell Gordon, and fome others

Newly arriv'd from Egers, beg admittance
Into your prefence.

Wallenf. Let them enter,
They are my noble friends. Madam take
The bright Emilia to your charge: Fredrick you
Have leave to wait on your Mistris. Worthy friends.

Ex. Dutch. Fred. Emil.

Int. Gordon, Lesle, Butler.

You're dearely welcome, I prefume the businesse Must be of much importance, that could draw You (without giving us first notice of it) From Egers hither.

Lefle. Mighty Sir, our fortunes,
Our honours, lives, whatfoe're we can call ours,
Are fuch a debt to you, that we'r ingag'd,
To facrifice them all in any fervice
For you, especially in this affaire

We'r now arriv'd about, fince it concernes Your precious life, which by that tyrant Cæfar, At halfe the price and value of his Empire, Is fet to fale.

Wallenf. Horror! as how, good Colonell.

Lefle. When you shall know fir

The traytors (such his malice would have made them)

Pick'd out for the assainates of your person, You'l blesse you from his trecheries, as from Insectious damps, for the men, best Generall, Are of such bosome trust, so neere ally'd To all your councels, 't had been as easie for them To have acted your sad ruine, as it is For me to speake this.

Tert. Very strange, pray name them. Lesse Even our selves.

Our faithfull innocent felves, were those fame mon-

Defign'd for to put in act his purpose, who 'Cause we were mercenaries in this warfare, He thought as easily we would fell our faiths, Courted us therefore with whole piles of honours, Mountaines of titles, mines of endlesse riches: But where our honours stand in competition, These are but frivolous baits, trisles for children To play and toy withall, our faiths are chrystall, Which poison cannot vitiate.

Wallenf. And our love Shall strive by yours to take a faire example, How to requite your truth, but pray what answer, Return'd you to this man more great in mischieses, Then he's in power or title.

Leste. Entertain'd
His proffer'd bounties with a specious shew
Of thankfulnesse, nay promis'd to effect
His damn'd intent, besought him not to imploy
Any other instruments but our selves t'accomplish
The ruine of your person: by this meanes

To free your deare life from the eminent danger, Of being by others aym'd at.

Tert. These strangers loves

Surpasse credit.

Wallenf. To thanke you For this same deare preservall of my life. Best friends, were to admit your action might, Receive by gratitude a fatisfaction, But pray divide my foule, my life and fortunes, Are at your disposition: noble Lords. That this base Emperour seekes to take my life By trechery, is an apparant figne, He feares that I should live, and halfe victorious E're blow be strucken, are they whom their foes Dread, e're they doe behold them: let's go on then, Arm'd with our aides, backt with our causes justice. 'Gainst this insulting Emperour, and resolve To pull the tyrant from his Throne, destroy His very name, his memory, his ashes, With as much easie freedome, as rough windes Demolish crasse buildings. Colonel Gordon. Some five dayes hence we shall arrive at Egers, There to make preparation for the Nuppals. Betwixt our fonne and faire Emilia.

Come Lords, fince we amongft our felves are true, Conquest is ours, which we'l with speed pursue.

Exeunt.

Scena tertia.

Albertus folus.

Alber. To be in love, nay to be so in love,
To put off all our reason and discourse,
Which does distinguish us from savage beasts,
To dote upon a face (which like a mirrour, Sully'd by any breath) by the least sicknesse,
Growes pale and ghastly: Is not this meere madnesse,
Why should 't inhabit here then: sure the soule,
As 'tis a spirit of a subtle essence,
A forme as thin and pure, as is an Angels,
Can ne're be author of these wild desires,
So opposite to its nature, they'r all slessly,
Sordid, as is the clay this frame's compos'd of.
Shall the soule.

Int. Ifab.

The noble foule, be flave to these wild passions, And bow beneath their waight: ha Ifabella.

All reason, sense and soule are in her lookes,
There's no discourse beyond them: cruell saire one,
Are you still resolute to persist in your
Strange tyranny, and scorne my constant love.

Isabel. Doe not sir
Abuse that sacred title, which the Saints,
And powers celestiall glory in, by ascribing
It to your loose desires, pray rather cloth them
In their owne attribute, terme them your lust sir,
Your wild irregular lust, which like those fire drakes,
Mis-guiding nighted travellers, will lead you

Forth of the faire path of your fame and vertue, To unavoided ruine.

Alber. This is coynefle, A cunning coynesse, to make me esteeme At a high rate, that jewell which you feeme To part from fo unwillingly (Merchants use it To put bad wares away: deare Ifabella, Thinke what excessive honour thou shalt reape, In the exchange of one poore triviall gemme, And that but meerely imaginary, a voyce, And unfubstantiall essence, yet for that Thou fhalt have reall pleasures, such as Queenes, Prone to delicious luxury, would covet To fate their appetites: Think Ifabella, That hardest Marble, though not cut by force, By oft diffusion of falt drops, is brought Into what ever forme the Carvers fancie Before had destin'd it: your heart's that substance. And will by frequent oratory of teares, Be brought to weare the perfect flampe, the figure

Of my affection on it Thus befieg'd, Ifabel. It is high time, I fummon up my vertue, All that is good, about me, to affift My resolution; Sir, I would be loath, That you should see me angry, 'tis a passion My modesty is unacquainted with, Yet in this cause, deare to me as my honour, I needs must chide your passion: O consider, Looke what a precipice of certaine ruine. Your violent will (as on some dangerous rocke, That strikes what e're dashes upon't, in pieces) Has cast your heedlesse youth upon: my Lord, Why should you venter your whole stock of goodnesse,

Upon forbidden Merchandize, a prize
Which the most barbarous pirats to the Lawes
Of morall honesty, would feare to feize on,
Both for its fanctity and triviall value.

Alb. I'm thunder strucke.

Ifab. What foolish thiefe, my Lord, would rob an Altar.

Be guilty of the facriledge, to gaine
A brazen cenfor: why should you then affect
A sin so great, as spoiling me of honour,
For such a poore gaine, as the fatisfying
Your sensual appetite; think, good my Lord,
The pleasures you so covet, are but like flattering mornings.

That shew the rising Sun in his full brightnesse, Yet doe e're night bury his head in tempests.

Alb. I'm disinchanted, all the charmes are fled, That hung like miss about my soule, and rob'd it Of the faire light of vertue: excellent Angel, You have that power in goodnesse, as shall teach Wonder, that child of ignorance, a faith, No woman can be bad: I doe confesse, Big with the rage of my intemperate lust, I came to blast your purity, but am Become its perfect convert, so reclaym'd By your best goodnesse from these soule intentions, Hell has not strength enough to tempt my frailty, Toth' like wild loosenesse, pray sweet forgive me, Seale it with one chaste kisse, and henceforth let Adore you as the faver of my honour, My truth and fames preferver.

Ifab. I am glad

I've wrought this reclamation on your folly, And trust me, I shall ever love this in you, Though my more humble thoughts shall ne're aspure

To affect your person.

Alb. Had you yeelded to my defires, Been no whit vertuous, I should have esteem'd you, (My looser heat by your consent extinguish'd) But as a faire house haunted with goblins, Which none will enter to possesse, and bless me From the prodigious building; when now,

Big with the chafte affurance of your vertue, I doe befeech you by your love, your mercy, Looke on my innocent love, more spotlesse Then are the thoughts of babes, which ne're knew foulenesse.

Accept me for your husband, flart not Lady, By your faire felfe I meane it, doe intreat it As my extent of happinesse.

Ifab. This my Lord,

Is too extreme oth' other fide, as much Too meane I hold my felfe to be your wife, As my owne fame and honour did esteeme me Too good to be your profitute: My Lord, The wiving Vine that bout the friendly Elme, Twines her foft limbes, and weaves a leavie mantle

For her supporting Lover, dares not venter, To mix her humble boughes, with the imbraces Of the more lofty Cedar: 'Twixt us two Is the fame difference: Love my Lord and hope A nobler choice, a Lady of your owne Ranke; all the ends my poore ambition Shall ever ayme, shall be to love your worth, But ne're aspire your Nuptials.

Alber. You're too humble, Impose too meane a value on a gemme, Kings would be proud to weare, deare Habella. Let not thy modest sweetnesse interpose A new impediment 'twixt my lawfull flames, And thy owne Vestall chastity, let not feare. (To thy fex incident) of my fathers wrath Stagger thy resolution; thou shalt be To me, my father, mother, brother, friend, My all of happinesse; if we cannot here In peace injoy our wishes, we will love Like Turtles in a Defart, onely bleft

In one anothers company.

Enter Fred. Newm.

New. Why look you fir, yonder's the cock oth game,

About to tred you ginny hen, they'r billing;
Shall we retire, my Lord, perhaps they are going to't.

And 'twould be a shame to spoile their sport.

Fred. I am refolv'd, I'le speake to him.

Newm. Your pleasure must be accomplish'd,
But take heed we draw not the Virgins curses on us
Both, take heed on't, it will fall heavy.

Alber. Surpriz'd, and by my brother, prethy fweet

Withdraw, I would not have thy timorous eares, Frighted with his loud anger.

Fred. Save you brother,
You've parted with your Mistresse, pray tell me,
Does she kisse well, has she a fragrant lip?
Are her demeanours courtly, apt to ravish?
Are you resolv'd to run away with her,
And stain the honour of our family,
For her sweet sake?

Alber. Gentle brother,
You speak a language I nor understand,
Nor value much the meaning. In your love
I medled not, and 't had been manners in you,
Not to have intruded upon mine, your presence
Being unrequired.

Fred. You'r very confident,
Young Gallant, in defence of your brave Mistresse,
I know you are in love, bravely in love
With a trim Chamber-maid, a thing made up
Of a cast Tassatie gowne of an old Wardrobe:
Degenerate brother, were I not assur'd
Of your chaste mothers vertues, I should question,
Whither my father got you, but I'm come
To disinchant thy senses from the charmes,

That hatefull witch throwes on them, but resolve Quickly to quit her, or by Heaven shee'd better

Commix with lightning.

Alber. Pray, good brother use
Your threats upon your Corporals, or stampe
At your tame Lancepresados, when they doe not
Performe your charge, your rage upon your boyes,
Were more becomming, then upon your brother:
If you will sit, and with attentive patience,
Marke what I shall deliver, I will give you
Reasons for my intentions, but if not,
You may depart unsatisfied.

Fred. Well Sir, be briefe, I shall attend you.

Alb. In briefe, I love faire Ifabella, so
As honour, not the vicious heat of youth,
Commands me to affect, I love her vertue,
And have in that as noble, rich a dowry,
As the addition of estate and blood,
Which you have acquir'd in your late happy match

With young Emilia.

Fred. Dare you, boy, name her,

And my Emilia as paralels

Alb. Why, good brother,

Though the transcends her in her birth and fortunes, Yet in the rare indowments of her minde, She is her equall, vertue has a foul as precious In peasants as in Princes, 'tis a birth-right None can deprive them of, who truly have it. 'Tis fo with Ifabella.

Fred. You doe intend to marry her

Alb. Yes brother.

Fred. Shee is a Whore.

Alb. 'Tis a most scandalous lye, and on your heart,

Ile prove her chaste and vertuous as Emilia, As your Emilia.

Fred. Have at you.

Fnt. Tertzki, Kintzki, Newman, Illawe.

Newm. Help to beat down their fwords, my Lords,

Death, Fredrick, Albertus, what doe you meane? Let's beat them both, hart I thinke you'r drunk With Lubecks beere or Brunfwicks Mum.

Kint. For shame Put up your angry weapons.

New. How fell you out Gentlemen, how fell you out.

Tert. It was a fad misfortune, nor would I It should arrive unto our Generals notice, For halfe my Earledome: 'Las my Lord you bleed.

Alb. No matter,

My blood could ne're in more holy use

Have been imploy'd.

New. Now the heat's over, do you not both thinke

Your felves a paire of coxcombs, come shake hands,

I will make you both stark drunke, but I will have you

Good friends agen, brothers fall out, for shame,

Explicit Assus tertius.

Actus quartus: Scena prima.

Wallenstein, Fredericke, Dutchesse.

Wallenf. Can this be possible.
Fred. 'Tis a truth,
And if your high authority countermand not
His fond intentions, he will wed her, and Dishonour our great Family.

Wallenf. Call him hither.

I shall instruct the gallant youth his duty.

Dutch. But good my Lord, do not with too fevere

A harshnesse chide the error of his love, Lest like a chrystall streame, which unoppos'd Runs with a smooth brow gently in its course, Being stop'd oth' sudden, his calme nature riot Into a wilfull fury, and persist In his intended sancie.

Wallenf. Gentle Madam, teach
Your women how to dreffe you, here are none
Doe need your prefence or instruction, you would have him

Leape your neat Chamber-maid, and get a Mon-

For you to play withall: He is here, Pray you depart, Fredrick attend your mother, I would be private.

Int. Albert.

Alb. Your Grace was pleas'd to fend for me.

Wallenf. I did fo.

Know you the cause?

Alb. Not yet, my Lord.

Wallens. I am your Father fir.

Whose frownes you ought to tremble at, whose anger

Should be as dreadfull to you, as Heavens curfes; Looke on my face, and reade my bufineffe there.

Alb. Alas my Lord, your lookes

Are discompos'd with rage, your fiery eyes,

Rowle with the accustom'd motion, they had wont

To dart upon your enemies, I am Assur'd my innocence can no way merit Your all-confuming anger.

Wallenf. 'Tis a lye,

A worthlesse lye, false as thy flattering hopes are, You are in love, most gallantly in love With Isabella, one who is compos'd Of paint and plaisters: thou degenerate monster. Traytor to fame, and particide to honour, Abject in thy condition, as thy thoughts are: Teare this vil'd strumpet from thy soule, do't quickly.

Renounce her with all binding tyes can urge thee To keep thy faith, or I will quite put off The name of Father, take as little notice Thou art my of-fpring, as the furly North, Does of the fnow, which when it has ingendred. Its wild breath fcatters through the earth forgotten.

This was the killing fever I still fear'd. Sir I should be a stranger to your blood, As well as noble worth, should I commit Actions I sham'd to justifie: I confesse I love faire Isabella, and beseech you, The meanenesse of her fortune and her birth Omitted, she may be confer'd upon me In lawfull marriage.

Wallenf. Dare you boy,

Speake this to me.

Alb. I should Sir be degenerate
From your great spirit, should I seare to utter
What I doe wish effected, were you a God,
As being my Father, you'r but a degree
To me beneath one, in a cause so righteous,
I should not onely boldly crave your license
But hope to have it granted.

Wallenf. Hell and furies,
Durst any mortall foole, but my owne issue,
Venter to brave my fury thus; resolve
Villaine in full to fatisfie my purpose,
Doe it without regret, renounce this strumpet
Even from thy soule, abandon her remembrance.
Or by my owne unwearied valour, better,
And with more safety thou mayst hug a wave,
When its white lips kisse heaven: yong sir your honor

Is not your owne, for it you'r but my factor,
And must give me account, a strict account
Of the errors you run in: to the Dust
Of my great Ancestors, stand I accountant
For all my family, and their blest ashes
Would breake their Marble lodgings, and come forth

To quarrell with me, should I permit this bar To staine their glorious Heraldry.

Alb. Great Sir,
Can vertue be a blemish, or true worth
Disgrace Nobility, 'twas that at first,
When Nature made all equall, did distinguish
'Twixt man and man, and gave a just precedence
To the most worthy: Honour is Vertues of-spring,
Since then the Angell, my affection's fixt on,
Is faire and vertuous, all the good that ever
Durst with fraile flesh commix, or earth be proud of:
How to our Families honour can she bring
A diminution? Can fir the chaste ice,
Kis'd by the Sun, into its native substance,

Pollute a chrystall River, furely rather
It addes fresh moysture to its streame. My Lord,
I am your sonne, and have been still obedient
To your commands; O by your love, your vertue,
Your never daunted vertue, I beseech you,
Grant me this one request, wer't for my life,
I should not be so abject, as to spend
This breath for its redemption.

Wallenf. Well, thy prate
Has overcome me, I am pittifull,
Beyond my nature pittifull to thee,
Thou shalt injoy thy wishes.

Alb. All the bleffings,

Prayers can obtain from heaven, showr down upon you

For your fuperlative mercy.

Wallenf. Stay and marke me,
'T shall be with this condition, that as soone
As thou art wed, and hast injoy'd thy wishes,
Ere the next Sun rise on you, you resolve
Without remorse, to kill your Isabella.

Alb. Heavens protect me!

Wall. Nay thou shalt sweare it too: 'Las gentle boy,

I know thy nature is too full of fire, To mix with fordid earth, and though thy luft, (Which is but manhood in thee) prompt thee on, To taste the sweets of Isabellas beauty,

I know thou fcornst so much to unmake thy Gentry.

To take her for thy wife, perhaps she will not Give up her honour, till the Church has seal'd That grant as lawfull; freely I allow Her brave ambition, if as a reward Due to her haughty pride, thy own hands kill her,

And so wipe out the infamy.

Alb. Strange cruelty!
So tyrants us'd to grant offenders life,

After their condemnation: to referve them To combat wild beafts in the spaceous Cirque,

Or bloody Amphitheater: My Lord.

Wallenf. Pish I am deafe, inexorable as Seas
Toth' prayers of Mariners, when their sinking Keel

Is drunke with billowes.

Ent. Dutch. Ifabel and Page.

Dutch. O my Lord,
Your justice on this cursed witch, this thiese,
This morning I have lost out of my Cabinet
The so much valu'd Jewell, which your bounty
Bestow'd upon me, none but she and I
Having been there since; she must be the thiese:
Force her to resultation.

Wall. 'Twas a gem,
My mother gave me, which I did preserve
With as much care, as votaries doe the reliques
Of their protecting Saints: I gave it you,
When in the eager fervor of my youth,
I destin'd you my wise: come hither minion,
You who can steale the Jewels of mens hearts,
With your inchanting forceries, will not feare
To make a venter upon pettier thest:
Sirrah goe bid them wait me here.

Ifa. My Lord,
I'm fo fecure in my own innocence,
That should your fury riot on my life,
Twould not affright me, I should meet my death,
As willingly as I should doe my rest,
After a tedious watching, there's no armour
Like that of innocence, with which I'm guarded,
And therefore laugh at punishment.

Wal. So brave, I shal foon quell your infolence: lay hands

Ent. a Guard.

On this ignoble strumpet, hang her up, Here in my presence.

Alb. Stay fir, I doe befeech you heare me.

Wal. Your intreaties

Are cast on me, as fools throw oyl on fire, Striving to extinguish it: hang her up,

Ile hang you all else.

Alb. Then Sir I will fpeake,
Since you forget to be a father to me,
I will put off my duty; I'm refolv'd,
Since 'tis impossible that we should live,
To dye together: nor doe not slave presume,
To touch this mine of purity, 'tis a treasure
While I'm alive Hell cannot ravish from me,
(For fiends would feare to touch it) if you murder

This spotlesse innocent Virgin, you are such,
So mercilesse a tyrant, as doe love
To feed on your owne bowels, one whom nature

Created for a curse, and to get curses, Such produgies as I am, one whom all Lovers Shall tremble at, if mentioned; one.

Wallenf. Death have I loft my command, is he or I

To be obey'd? hang her, if he refift, Kill the unnaturall Traytor.

Ifab. Deare Albertus,
Draw not a ruine on thy prizeles life,
For my defpis'd fake I will go to death,
In full peace as does an Anchorite, that's affur'd
Of all his finnes forgivenesse.

Alb. Sawcie divell,

Carry that touch of her to hell, 'twill serve To mitigate thy tortures.

Is run through. Kils one of the Guard.

Dutch. O my Lord, what has your fury acted, Deare Albertus.

Alb. 'Twas a most friendly hand, and I could kisse it.

For the most welcome benefit; Ifabella,
In death thou givest me life, thy innocence,
Will like my guardian Angell, safe convey me
To yonder heavenly Mansion; pray forgive me,
Deare Sir, if in my over-hasty zeale
In this poore innocents quarrell, my wild fury,
Transgress'd my naturall duty, and as the last
Request your dying son can aske, take pitty
On this most innocent Maid: thy hand, my faire one,

And now as willingly I doe expire, As a bleft Martyr, who does court the fire. O Ifabella.

Dies.

Dutch. O my deare Albert.

Wall. Death flave, dare you play with a flame That shall consume you.

Hang her up, or torments shall pay your breach of duty.

Ifab. There friend, there's all the Jewels I am mistris of,

And that thou merits, prethee be as speedy
In thy dispatch, as sate it selfe; there is
A pure white Ghost in you same azure cloud,
Expects me straight, I come my deare Albertus.

Is hangd.

Wallenf. Take hence their bodies, 'twas a hopefull boy,

And one I lov'd well, till his wild love

Made him forget his duty; and 'tis better

He di'd with fame, his fword in's hand, then that

He'd liv'd with foule dishonour: would he were

Alive agen, I do begin to seele

Strange horrors here, and that big guest, my soule,
Is shaken as with a nipping frost, hence idle grief,
I must be furnish'd with more spritly passions,
Thou art too heavy, sit for the society
Of none but pensive women. All must dy,
Why should not he then, 'twas his destiny.

Gordon, Lefle, Butler.

Lefle. Are all your horse in readinesse.

Gordon. Yes, 'tis time,

That we were mounted, 'tis foure leagues at least Unto the Generals Campe, and 'twill be late Ere we arrive there, are you yet resolv'd Upon the meanes, by which to put in practice Our long intended purpose, our delay Will make the Emperour apt to call in question Our faiths integrity.

Lefle. So great a businesse,
Is not with easie speed to be perform'd:
An eager haste oft-times o'rethrowes the fortunes
Of such affaires, if we once get him hither,
Within our City walls, be consident,
He's in his grave, but have you given command,
That all your Souldiers be in readinesse,
To waite the Generalls entry.

Butler. They shall be
In their best furniture of Armes, all drawne
Into parada, he shall have all pompe,
And ornament of warre, to bid him welcome.

Lefe. These triumphs
Shall be but funerall pomps before his death;
Gordon, you must, as Governour of Egers,
Present the keyes with all humility
To his dispose, 'twill make him be more carelesse,
And trust his very soule into our hands.
Gordon. Doubt not me.

I shall performe with cunning skill, what e're Belongs to me; but doe you intend the Generall

Alone shall fall, or his confederates Shall perish with him.

Lest. O by all meanes, Indian princes
Doe carry flaves to wait on them into
The other world, and 'twere inglorious,
That our brave Generall should not have that privilege

Count Tertski, Kintski, Newman, Marshall Illawe, Shall be his harbingers, and i'th' shades below, Provide fit entertainment for his Ghost.

Butl. They are of power, their deaths will shrowdly weaken.

The strength of the Conspiracie.

Lefle. Very true,
I'le craftily inftill into his eares,
New causes of distrust, so to beget
In him more considence of my faith, so to Allure him hither sooner, we must worke
Surely, as does the Mole, who digs
Her habitation in the earth, and scornes
All the assaults of tempests; when he's in,

We must be prompt in action, sure of hand, And found of heart, and strike him with that violence.

From the fuppos'd Heavens, his ambition climbs to, That the thin ayre does from its purer Regions Dull earthly meteors; come let's away, Nought croffes actions like a dull delay.

Dutch. Thinkst thou he is So much addicted to his ease, he will Neglect his businesse, goe in and tell him, The Governors of Egers, Colonell Gordon, And Colonell Lesse are without upon Affaires of consequence.

Would pardon me, your felfe with greater fafety
Might do it, Madam.

Dutch. Foolish boy, goe in, I will be thy

Though most unwillingly your command; my Lord, Please you to rise, your Dutchesse.

Wallenf. Ha, where's my fword, Thou art a Coward Ghost, and not my fonnes, To take me in my sleep unarm'd, my Pomard Will still be faithfull to me, if thou beest not Thin ayre, its point will graze on thee.

Stabs the Page.

Dutch. O my Lord,
What has your fury acted? this your fudden
Murdring this innocent youth, doth adde new horrors

To your strange cruelties.

Wallenf. Ha, my Page! his death Was but due justice for his breach of duty, For thus disturbing of my rest.

Dutch. My Lord,

Your hands are purpled so in innocent blood, Teares cannot wash the tincture of: my selfe Am as deepe guilty as you in the slaughter Of Isabella, she was innocent,

The Jewell I accus'd her of, this morning,
Griefe to my foule, I've found, pray heaven, repentance

May expiate our offences.

At thought of these sad accidents. Noble Friends,

Ent. Gord. Butl. Lesle, Newm. Tert. Kint.

Here to present you with the keyes of Egers,
My place of Government, and with them my

To doe you fervice.

Wallenf. Noble Gordon,
You doe so much indeare mee by your love,
I have no possibility to requite
Your overflow of Curtesies, have you not
Receiv'd new intelligence of businesse,
Which does concerne me.

Leste. New temptations Sir
Against your precious life, 'tis to be fear'd,
Lest seeing we doe slacke so in performance
Of what we've promis'd, he'l imploy new agents
To attempt your ruine, and should treason,
As 'tis a subtle serpent, stings unseen Sir,
Invade your life: to what a dire missortune
Were we, whose lives have upon yours dependance,
Betray'd, and therefore good my Lord beware,
Lest your owne courage, which contemns all dangers,

Doe undoe you.

Wallenf. Never feare; how farre

Is't hence to Egers.

Gordon. Some three houres easie march.

Wallenf. Set forward thither;

It were in value my enemies swords to feare,

When I doe carry sharper pomards here.

Emperour, Hungary, Questenberg.

Emp. Vext with fo many cares, fo many mifchiefs.

That doe like Hidra's dreadfull heads increase, By cutting off, as billowes follow billowes, Succeed each other with that eager violence, Our weary Eagles know not where to perch, But flag their fickly wings: wer't not irreligious, I should capitulate with the powers divine, And tax them of injustice; my whole raigne Has been a long and one continued trouble; And if blest peace with her faire beames did e're Shine on our Empire, 'twas but like a faire Deceitfull wind, courting the ships out of the harbor, Into the maine to drowne them: but the mother Of a more horrid warfare, that I seare as I found the Wreathe Imperiall drown'd in blood, So I in blood must leave it.

Quest. Have good hope Sir,
Tides then approach their full height, when their ebbe

Has been at lowest; the most hideous tempests, Which seem'd to threat the ruine of the world, Being usher'd in by thunder and hot lightning, Are soonest past, there's nothing violent Can boast of perpetuity; our fortunes Are not so desperate, as our seares present them: We've hands and hearts lest yet, that dare oppose The inhumane Traytor, and our causes justice

Assures us, if we cannot live victorious, We shall due nobly.

Hung. Man, my royall Father
Is not himselfe, when he beholds
Events through the quicke perspective of feare,
Which shewes him dangers at remotest distance,
As clearest and his most perspicuous objects.
Suppose this traitor in his Giant-reach
Fathome even heaven it selfe, yet there are bolts
To strike him into earth for his ambition,
And make his memory and name, all, save his treason.

For ever to be forgotten.

Emp. That which most
Does drive my tortur'd soule into affrights,
Is, that I see we'r false among our selves:
The faithlesse Souldiers daily doe in troupes,
Fly from our Ensignes to the Traytors Campe:
What cause have we then but t'expect sad ruine?
When those who should be our security,
Doe prove our greatest enemies; our Guard,
Our seare and terror, they all looke on him,
is superstitious Indians on the Sunne,
With adoration; on me, with contempt,
Or (but at best) with pitty.

Quest. Mighty Casar,
To doubt an ill before it fall upon us,
'Mongst valuant and resolved soules, is counted
A point of cowardise: Great Spirits ever
Should be above their fates: good Sir retreat
Into that fortresse of your minde,
Your resolution, call it up to guard
Your soule from timorous thoughts:
Are you the man have sway'd
The Roman Empire soure and twenty yeeres,
With that successe against your forraigne soes,
Your very name more then your forces vanquish'd,
To let a Traytor fright you: good my Lord
Let's draw forth new battalias to the Field,

Awake the Drum and Trumpet, fummon up The very last hopes of our weaken'd strength. 'Gainst this insulting traytor; very infants Will on the fudden grow up able men,

And fight in this brave quarrell.

Hung. Heaven it selfe Will arme on our fide, and with certaine vengeance, Pursue the inhumane monster: why! to dye, (As that's the worst can happen) in this cause. Were a religious martyrdome: I am your fon Sir, And what your fortunes are, good or disaftrous, Mine has on them dependance; by my hopes, I doe So little waigh the glorious traytors pride, I thinke him worthy scarce my meanest thought, And reft affur'd, ere long, I shall behold This fearefull meteor, that would be a Star, And does affright us with his hideous blaze. Like a vaine Comet drop his fading raves.

Emp. Your comforts Come as in drougths the elementall dew Does on the earth, it wets, but leaves no moysture, To give the fear'd plants growth: But yesternight We'd certaine information, that our forces Led by Matthias Gallas, were o'rethrowne By Saxon Waymar, and his fon young Fredricke: Who had they knowne as well how to purfue, As gaine a victory, and made a fudden Onflaught upon Vienna, their's; not ours Had been the Wreathe Imperiall. Now your newes fir.

Int. Messenger.

Messen. Letters from Colonell Lesle sir, from Egers.

Emp. This is our latest hope; he writes me word.

That the Arch-traytor, and his prime confederates,

Last night arriv'd at Egers, and assures me
Of their immediate ruine: Well Colossus,
You'd best stand firme, unshaken as a rocke,
Whose feet the sierce waves striving to trip up,
Doe 'gainst its hard hooses dash themselves to pieces,
Or thou wilt fall unpittied, fall to be
The scorne of story, the contempt and by-word
To all posterity; let's in my Lords:
This law the Heavens inviolably keepe,
Their justice well may slumber, but ne're sleepe.

Gordon. Ferdinand,

Had he arriv'd here in his greatest glory, Could not have been more welcome; while I am Governour of this towne, it and my life Are at your service.

Wallen!. Noble Gentlemen,
You do so loade me with new courtesses,
I know not first for which to give you thankes,

Full bowles of sprightly Wine that Souldiers use

In entertainment; to our Generals health, And to his good recovery from his melancholy.

A deadly poyfon to him: Colonell Gordon.

New. May he dye for droughth, like a Westphalia Pig

I'th' dog dayes, or be choakt with eating tofted cheefe.

Gordon. My Lord of Kinizki,

This to our Generals health, and welcome hither.

Off with as much ease, as a leaguer can In a grim sutlers house of thatch: My Lord, Under your gracious pardon, take me off This lusty rowse to your owne health, and after Begin as much to each of ours, and if It doe not make you as merry as a Corporall Upon pay day, say I'm no Esculapius, But a meere Mountebanke in the effects Of sprightly Wine.

Wallers. Kind Gentlemen, my thankes
To all of you, and would my disposition
Afford me licence, I should not forget
The fouldners ceremonie, to begin
Each of your happy wishes howsoever
I will trench so farre on my melancholy,
To drink this cup. To all your healths.

Omnes. Your Grace hath shewen us A too excessive curtesie.

Wall. Ile onely
Repose a little, and if I find
My sad distemper alter, Ile returne,
And frolicke in your company.

Newm. I fmell him:

Hee has a plot upon us, hee'le steale hence, And shift a score or two of cups, and then Set fresh upon us, make us all as drunke, As rats in the Canaries.

Lefte. Wee'l attend your Grace.

Wallenf. By no meanes,

Let not my melancholy discompose

Your thought of feelinks might

Your thought of frolicke mirth; there's Colonel Newman,

Will in my absence take a cup or two

For me: meane time bee merry, 'tis my charge:

Remember to observe it.

Ex. Wallenf.

Leste. I'me forry,
Hee should bee thus distemper'd here. My Lord
Let not our Generals sadnesse rob us of
Our late intended sollity: Colonell Newman
You'd wont to bee all ayre: I hope, you are not

Turn'd earth o'th' fuddaine.

Newm. No faith, thank heaven, I feel no inclination

That favours of mortality: gentlemen Shal's have a catch.

Omnes. With all our hearts, good Colonell. New. A military Madrigall, I learn'd it Of a right Impe of Mars, a red-fac'd Serjeant, At Halberstat.

Lefle. Will you begin.

Newm. Yes verily, but good Colonell
Let not your voyce rebell, nor be exalted

Into a Calidonia tune, 'twill spoile Our ditty.

A Catch.

Lefle. My thankes, my Lords please you this cup

Toth' happy Nuptials 'twixt young Fredricke,

And the faire Emilia.

Gordon. Egers will be honour'd

To have them celebrated here.

Newm. Doe me right good Colonell, You drinke it as 'twere scarbeere.

ou drinke it as twere icarbeere Lesle. Captaine Butler.

Newm. No whifpering good Colonell Lefte,

No whispering,

You know what followes, but drinke off your cup Like a right Cavalier, this Neckar wine Has a strange vertue in't, it elevates

Both slesh and sourt: a months means for a wence

Both flesh and spirit; a months means for a wench now.

Lefle. My Lord, I am

So farre from giving you a fit requitall
For your late courtefies, that as fatisfaction,
I must beg a new favour, one cup more,
Let's all together drinke a full carouse,
Unto our Generals health, and his revenge
Upon the Emperour, you shall drinke no more,
'T shall be your last cup, trust me.

New. I shall drink no more, marke that, pray fill up mine

Till it run o're, I would be loath to have My last cup faulty.

Lesle. To his revenge.

Ent. four Souldiers with Pistols as they are drinking, they shoot Tertzki, Kıntzki, Illawe, Newman, they fall. Tert. Traytor, Inhospitable slave.

dyes.

New. I'm fomething hot about the heart,
A cup of your small wine to coole me, sure
You grudg'd my liquor, and so broach'd me behinde,
To let out what I had put in before, pox of your pellets
Say I: I care not for any other hurt they have done me,
But that they have spoil'd my drinking.

Dues

Lefte. So, this was wel perform'd, drag in their bodies;

Now Country-men our taske is halfe perform'd, We have lop'd of the maine armes that did grow Unto this lofty Cedar, there remaines

Nought but the trunke to cut from earth, and that Shall by our owne hands fall, these shall not Have so much honour done them, as to triumph In our great Generals slaughter: As great Fulius Fell by his much lov'd Brutus, who when justice, And his deare mothers cause, the Common-wealth, Commanded him to strike, with one home blow, Finish'd brave Casars life; so he by us

Shall furely perish: Friendship must not save, Him and his soule ambition from one grave.

Excunt.

Wallenstein folus.

Wallenf. Sure I beheld them, or the ayre condenf'd

Into their lively figures; in their shrowds,

Pale and as meager, as they had convers'd

A yeere with the inhabitants of the earth,
And drunke the dew of charnell houses: Shew'd
Albertus and his lovely Bride; they wav'd
Their ghastly hands to me, as if in that
Dumbe language they'd invited me to come,
And visit them in their cold Urnes. To dye,
Why 'tis mans nature, not his punishment;
With this condition we all enter life,
To put it off agen; 'tis but a garment,
And cannot last for ever, both its fashion
And stuffe will soon weare out; why then should death,

(If I were now creeping into my Marble) To me be terrible, fince 'tis maine folly, To feare that which we no way can avoid: Nor is't much matter how we dve. by force. Or naturally checker'd with grifly wounds, Or in our beds, fince all's but the fame death full: Oh! but to dve furcharg'd with mortall finnes. Such as can kill our everlasting beings. Our foules, and fend them hence to bathe in floods Of living fire; there, that's the frightfull mischiefe, The other's but a trifle, I, who never Could feare the other, at the thought of this. Am one with death already; my vast crimes, My horrid murders kill that conscience in me. Which makes me know my guilt, that conscience, Which as my shaddow followes me.

Int. Lesle, Gordon, Butler.

Gordon. Come foftly, And if my stroake mile, second me.

Stabs Wallenstein in the backe.

Wallenf. Ha! 'twas no ghost, that was a mortall touch.

It came so home and heavily: base Traytor, Who e're thou art, thou durst not see my face, My lookes would even have blasted thee: Ha! Leste, Gordon, Butter.

Lefle. Yes Traytor-Duke, 'twas we, who cut thy foul

From thy weake twist of life, we who glory More in performing this brave act of justice, Then had we gain'd the Empire thy ambition Aspir'd to, thy base trechenes to Casar, Are by us revene'd.

Gordon. The Counts,
Thy bold confederate Rebels, by our hands
Sent to their ruine.

Wallenf. Thus coward Hare,
Prey on a dying Lyon, for thee Lefle,
Basely persidious to me in thy saith,
Receive my last breath in a curse: you have
But plaid the Hang-men to persorme heavens justice.
Forgive me Heaven my past offence: I dye,
Not for my ambition, but my cruelty.

Dyes.

Lefte. Let us convey the body in, and post
With all speed to Vienna, and give notice
Toth' Emperor of our proceedings; thus every Traytor shall,
Stead of a Crowne, meet his owne Funerall.

The Prologue.

Is worth my Feares, to fee within this place
Wits most accomplish d Senate; tis a grace
Transcending our desert, though not our seare,

Least what our Author writes should not appeare Fit for this Iudging prefence; all the wayes He knowes that lead to the true throne of Playes Are rough uneafte pathes, fuch as to tread Would fright an active able Mufe, strike dead A weake and timerous travailer: for fome Will give the play a pitious Martyrdome Ere it hath life; yet have t excite that flame, Only distrust in the new Authors name. Others for shortnesse force the Author run. And end his Play before his Plot be done. Some in an humorous fquemishnesse will fay, They only come to heare, not fee the Play, Others to fee it only, there have beene, And are good flore, that come but to be feene: Not fee nor heare the Play: How shall we then Please the so various appetites of men. It flarts our Authors confidence, who by me Tels you thus much t' excuse the Comedy. You shall not here be feasted with the fight Of anticke showes; but Actions, such as might And have beene reall, and in fuch a phrase, As men should speake in : Ladies if you praise, At least allow his language and his plot, Your owne just Priviledge, his Muse hath got So full a wreath, that fpight of Envies frowne Shall in his Brow fit as a lasting Crowne.

The Ladies Priviledge.

Act. 1. Scena. 1.

Enter Bonivet, Laclantio, and Vitelli.

Bonivet.

S the newes certayne he is arriv'd!

Vit. The Duke

Had fure intelligence, that the whole Fleet

Anchor'd last night without the Bay: and now For confirmation of it, the thick breath Of his faluting Cannon hangs in Clouds Over the Cittadell, and the glad noyse Of the applauding people, gratulate His entrance to the River.

Bon. The day rose
So cheerefully, as if it meant to gild
With unaccustom'd light, his sayles swolne big

As pregnant mother with the pleasing ayre Of victory.

Lac. The rumour of the Fleet Has fild all Italy with wonder, how So fmall a number should in open fight Defeat the Turkish Navy; and conclude The Generals skill and valour, the mayne cause Of the atchievement.

Vit. Hee has return'd as large Affurance of his worth, as when his force Back'd with fuccessive fortune which attends His mighty resolution, over-threw The power of Venice in a fight, which changed The Sea into a flame, and tooke me in 't

His fortunate Captive.

Bon. Sir, tis noble in you To acknowledge that as good, which might have bin

Your eminent ruine; stately buildings so Rife out of ancient structures which the rage Of eating time, or anger of the windes Had totter'd from the ground works: you may prove

As fairely happy in the Generals love. As in the honour which your name or Country

Confer'd on your defert.

Vit. You speake the scope Of my intention, a perfect friend Includes both honour, Country, Family, And all that's deare and holy: fuch a friend As is my Dorra, to whose spacious merit Succession shall pay volumes, who was man Ere in the smooth field of his face, rough age Displayd his harry Ensigne; who has puld Bright honours wreath from her triumphant front In battailes when the trembling Sea being calme Did croud and thrust its waves into a storme To part the dreadfull fury.

Lac. The report

Of his Land fervices do fland on termes Of Competition with the multitude Of his Sea Victories.

Vit. Yet must subscribe

To his Navall triumphs: though the Land
Has feene him Conquerour, when the bodies flayne

Buried the ground they dy'd on, which did shake
To view it selfe entomb'd by them, for whom
It was ordain'd a Sepulchre, the Drums
Were to his eares delightfull as the Lute:
Pikes moving then in Forrest, seem'd as groves
Of losty Cedars sird by sportive winds,
And when warres Quiresters, the whistling Fise.
And surly Trumpet sung an army dirge,
That fatall musicke wraps his sprightfull sence,
Like joviall Hymnes at Nuptialls.

Bon. You cannot exceed
His praises duty, fince his worth containes
Honours most several attributes.

Ent. Frangipan.

Lac. Signior Frangipan,

What riding post on foot, whither in such haste!

Fran. Very well met gentlemen, I fcarce have breath

To utter a wife word yet.

Lac. We do believe you Sigmor, and are in doubt

When you'll have leasure for 't.

Fran. Heare you the newes,

The General's arriv'd. farewell, he will not land Till I have had the maiden-head of his hand.

Exit.

Bon. Tis fuch another Parrat, he relates Things by tradition, as dogs barke: his newes Still marches in the reare, yet he relates it As confidently, as if each tale he tells, Was to be straight inserted as an eight

Ent. Doria, Adorni, & Sabelli.

To the feven former wonders—But here comes one

Will cut off the Fooles Character: renowned Generall

Doe us the gratious honour to permit us Salute the hand has fav'd our Country.

Do. Noblest friends,

I am more victorious in your earely loves,
Than in the Turkish Conquest; though I remaine
A Captive to your kindnesse, my Vitelli,
The solid earth, or a continued Rocke,
May by some strange eruptions of the wind,
Be rent, and so divided: but true friends
Are adjuncts most inseparable: I have Still worne thee here Vitelli, as a Jewell
Fit for no other Cabinet: gentlemen
Your welcome hands me thinks we should em-

So as ships grapple in hot fight, nor part, Till our affectionate fury has discharg'd

Vollies of joyfull courtefie.

Ador. This is fitter ceremony for them then to embrace an enemy, who will not part on termes so easie; these gentlemen know better to cut a Caper, than a Cable, or board a Pinck in the Burdells, than a Pinace at sea: I marvaile my Lord should know such Milk-sops.

Vit My Lord,

You come t' milruct us Courtship, as y' ave taught Your foes to seare your valour: you appeare As if this were your Nuptiall day, on which You were to wed bright triumph; but you can As well Court peace in filkes, as raging warre
In burnish'd steele, and touch the ravishing strings
With as much cunning industry, as if
Mars could like Orpheus strike the trembling
Harp.

Signior Adorni welcome home, I hope Y ave made a richer prize, then when my ship Struck to your mercy.

Ador. Yes, we are very like
To make good prize indeed, when all the profit
Goes to the State and heavy-headed Burgers,
That lye and fnort at home, and eate what we Sweat bloody drops for.

Do. Honest Avorni,
His bluntnesse must excuse him gentlemen;
How harsh and rough soe're he seemes, his humour
Will quickly vary, when I have bin tyr'd
With toyle of warre; the observations which
His travailes have afforded him of men,
Countries, and manners, lively set forth
By his expressive action, has begot
Mirth in my drowsie soule: when y' are acquainted
With his conceit of carriage; you'll not affect
A joyialler Companion.—See the Duke.

Flourish. Enter Trivulci, Chrisea, Eurone, Corunba.

Tri. My noble warrior,

Peace now lookes lovely on us, fince we enjoy

The author of 't in lafety: rife my Doria,

Let me embrace those youthfull limbes which cloath

Warre in loves livery: thy honour'd father,

When he return'd laden with Turkish spoyles,

As trophies of his valour from the slaughter

Of Haly Bassa at Lepanto, where

The Christian name was hazzarded, arriv'd not

More welcome to the State; believe me youth, Hadft thou a mother living, to be proud Of thy Nativity, unlesse she wept For joy to see thee, could no way expresse A more affectionate gladnesse: Chrisea, Eurione welcome him home, who cannot Receive an equall grace to the just value Of his deservings.

Chri. Your grace prepares us for that,] We did intend to ofter.

Corin. Yes truely did wee fir, this Generall is illbred, I warrant him, to flight a gentlewoman of my demeanor.

Dor. My gracious Lord, To tender thanks, where tis a debt, not duty, Befits an equall; fubjects ought to offer, With the fincere devotion that our Priests Doe prayers to Heaven, their hearts as facrifices To their deferving Princes, whose sole favours Doe as the quickning lustre of the Sunne Cherish inferiour spirits: yours have bin Showr'd downe on me as elementall dew On the parcht earth, which drinks it up, and cannot Give heaven a retribution, yet my duty Shall speak my willing thankfulnesse, and while These armes can weild victorious steele, no danger Shal fright me from that fervice which I owe My Prince and Country. fince men are not borne For themselves onely; but their life's a debt To th' Common-wealth that bred 'hem.

Tr. Gentle warriour,
Thy fathers fpirit swells thy soule, I reade it
In thy submissive loyalty; lets in,
Tis just that those who caus'd the warres to cease,
Should have the early fruits of their owne peace.

Flour. Ex. præter Corim. and Eursone.

Euri. Corimba, Have you imploy'd a ferious diligence yet In giving Lord Vitelli fecret notice
Of my affection to him?
Corim. Truely Madam,
And as I hope to have a husband yet
Ere I be fifty, I have beene so ta'ne up
About my new device, I scarce have leisure
To say my prayers sincerely: Ladybird
You looke not sprightly, ravishing, onely this star
Was not well cut, nor well laid on, it wanted
A little of my learned art: Vitelli
Doubt him not Madam, he shall love you so:
Tis pretty neat now, I would not have a Lady
That weares a glasse about her, have the least Pimple in her countenance discompos'd, it does
Disgallant a whole beauty.

Eur. But Corimba
What's this to me, thou maist as well tell tales
Of love to one departing life these toyes

Of love to one departing life, these toyes Relish with me as bitter pills with children, Wilt thou effect my businesse?

Cor. I confesse

I have beene very fortunate in bringing
Couples together, though I neare could couple
My selfe with any, your Ladyship could not
Have chose a better agent.

Enter Frangipan.

Fran. Save you sweet Lady, save you, Aunt I have Lost all my mornings exercise at Tennis

In seeking you, and yet was still in hazzard,
Whether I should meet you; I must request a little
Helpe from your Art good Aunt, a patch, or two,
To make me appeare more lovely, for my glaste
Tells me I have a very scurvy face
Without some ornament.

Cori. Tis a good innocent face, be not asham'd on't;

Ile cut out one instantly; nay I never

Goe unprovided of materialls let me fee, What forme is best for thee; that somthing timerous

A heart fluck neatly on thy face, will excite
Thy heart to more audacity, good Madam
Dost not become him prettily? Cosen be sure
You doe commend this fashion to all gentlemen,
Wert but as common among them as Ladyes,
My wit would be eternally made famous
For the invention

Fran. Wilt please you to dispatch Ant, i'me in hast.

I've a whole staple of newes to vent.

Corin Of what troe?

I would have my kindred more ridiculous
To th' world than I am; Cosen all your newes
Is stale; invent me rather some choice story,
How true or false no matter, and declare it
For newes, twill please farre better, and endeare
Your judgement i'th' relation——

Enter Doria, Chrifea, Sabelli.

Fran. Noble Generall y'are happily encountred; Have you feen my Aunt yet Signior, here she is, I have

Newes to informe you worth your knowledge. Dor. Keep them

Good Signior till some other time: Eurione We must implore your absence, we'd be private.

Cor. Why we have beene trusted With as good secrets: please your Lordship Accept this Crescent, you see my Cosen Is in the fashion; let me lay it on, Insooth your face is, for a souldiers, Too smooth, and polite; this device will shew As't had a skar upon it, which is an honour To faces Military.

Dor. Good Madam gravity,
Keep your devices for your Chamber Lords,
That dance to Ladies shadowes; pray be gone,
We need not your society——Sabelli

Exeunt

Put to the doore, and then be gone-Chrifea

Exit.

The modest Turtles which In view of other more lascivious Birds Exchange their innocent loves in timerous fighes, Do when alone most prittily convert Their chirps to billing, and with feather'd armies Encompasse mutually their gawdy neckes.

Chri. You would inferre that we Should in their immitation fpend this time Intended for a conference which concernes us Neerer then Complement.

Dor. Why my Chrifea,
We may entwine as freely, fince our loves
Are not at age yet to conceive a finne,
Thine being new borne, and mine too young to fpeake

A lawlesse passion, for my services
Pay me with pricelesse treasure of a kisse,
While from the balmy sountaines of thy lips
Distributed a moisture precious as the Dew,
The amorous bounty of the morne
Casts on the Roses cheeke: what wary distance
Do you observe? speake, and enrich my eares
With accents more harmonious then the Larks
When she sings Hymns to Harvest.

Chr. Sure my Lord Y'ave studied Complement; I thought the warre Had taught men resolution, and not language.

Dor. Oh you instruct me justly, I should rather Have tane the modest Priviledge of your lip, And then endeavor'd to repay the grace With my extreamest eloquence.

Chri. You mıstake me.

Dor. Remit my ignorance, and let me read The mystery of thy language in thy lookes, In which are lively Characters of love Writ in the polish'd tablets of thy cheekes: Which feeme to vary colours, like the Clouds When they prefage a storme; and those bright eyes Dart unaccustom'd beames, which shine as anger Flash'd from their fiery motion.

Chri. You misconster The intention of my lookes, I am not angry Though much distemper'd.

Dor. At what, by whom? Lives there a creature fo extreamly bad Dares dis-compose your patience? speake, reveale The monster to me; were he fenc'd with flames, Or lock'd in Bulwarkes of congetted yee. And all the fiends flood Centinels to guard The passage, I would force it to his heart, Through which the mounting violence of my rage Should peirce like lightning.

Chri. I beleeve

That in fome triviall quarrell to redeeme My fame, should scandall touch it, you would fight Perhaps to shew your valour: But I have A taske to enjoyne me, which my feares possesse me, You dare not venture to accept.

Dor. By truth You wrong my faith and courage to suspect me Of so extreame a Cowardize: have I stood the heat Of Battailes till upon the mountainous piles Of flaughter'd Carcaffes, the foules which left em Seem'd to ascend to Heaven: that your suspition Should taint my honour with this base revolt? This is not noble in you.

Chri. Doe not rage, When you shall heare it, you will then confesse Your confident errour.

Dor. My loyalty will not Permit that strong rebellion in my breast,
To doubt the meanest falsehood in a word
Her voyce can utter, which should charme the world

To a beliefe, fome Cherubim has left Its roome in heaven, to carroll to the earth Celeftiall Anthems, and I now beginne To question my owne frailty; but by all Which we call good or holy, be't your will I should invade inevitable death, In its most ugly horrour, my obedience Shall like a carelesse Priot cast this bark On that pale rocke of ruine.

Chri. Will you sweare this!

Dor. Yes, invent

A forme of oath fo binding, that no Law Or power can dispense with: and ile seal't With my best blood: pray Madam tell me what The imposition is you judge so easily, Will stagger my just truth, that I may siye On Loves light wings to act it.

Chr. Heare it then, and doe not, As you respect your oath, or love, request The cause of what I shall command.

Dor. Still Suspitions:

My honour be my witnesse, which no action Shall violate, I will not.

Chrs. Enough, that vow Cannot but be materiall, receive it, I must no longer love you.

Dor. That's no command: what did you say Chrifea?

Chr. I must no longer love you, and command you,

Leave your affection to me.

Dor. Y'are very pleasant Lady.
Chri. You'll finde me very senous: nay more,
I love another, and I doe enjoyne you,
Since tis a man you may o're-rule, to affist me
In my obtaining him, without whose love
I'me resolute to perish.

Dor. Sure I dreame,

Or fome strange suddaine death has 'chang'd his frame

To immortality, for were I flesh
And should heare this, certaine my violent rage
Would pull me to some desperate act beyond
The reach of sury, these are words would insect
Rose-colour'd patience; Cleere and lovely front
With loathsome leprose, change stames to teares
And with unusuall harshnesse of the sound
Deasen the genius of the world.

Chri. Where's now
The strength of soule you boasted, does the noyse
Of the death speaking Cannon, not affright
Your setled resolution, and the voyce
Of a weak woman shake your youthfull blood
Into an ague: since you so ill beare this
When you shall heare the man, whose love has stolne

Your interest, you will rage more than unlimited fire,

In populous Cities.

Dor. Sure tis she who speakes:

I doe enjoy yet sound untainted sence,
Each faculty does with a peacefull harmony retaine
Its proper Organ; yet she did rehearse
She must no longer love me: oh that word
Transformes the soule of quiet into rage,
Above distracted madnes: madam tell me,
What place is this? for you have led me
Into a subtle Labyrinth, where I never
Shall have fruition of my former freedome,
But like an humble anchorite, that digs

With his owne nayles his grave, must live confin'd To the sad maze for ever.

Chri. Sır you cannot

By most submissive and continued prayers Reclaime my affection, which stands fixt as Fate Vaon your friend Vitella.

Dor. My friend Vitell !
Chri. Sir, I [do] not use
To est my life away: Vitelli is
Theperson, to obtain whose pretious love
I do conjure you by all tyes of honour
To imploy your utmost diligence.

Do. Can I bee So tane o'th' fuddaine? has the feeble spirit Of some degenerate Coward frighted hence My reblution, which has given a Law To fatcit felfe, that I must now become The flae to my owne ruine: oh Chrisea, Who wet so good that vertue would have sigh'd At the uwelcome spectacle: had you Appearchut woman in a passion, Though if the flightest consequence: oh doe not Abjure tat Saint-like temper, it will be A changehereafter, burdenous to your foule: A finne toone, who all his life-time bleft With peae of conscience, at his dying minute Falls intonortall enmity with heaven, And perifes eternally.

Chr. By will Guides myletermination, and you must In honour st your promise.

Dor Ys, I will,
Since you on urge it tho, but two
Things preduct to me, and one cruell word
Robs me of both; my friend and her, Chrifea
I have not le another figh to move,

Nor teare to eg your pitty.

You may as filly thinke to kiffe the starres,

'Cause they shine on you, as recall my vowes, Which'I will urge no further; but wish you Regard your honour: But sarewell, I must Be cruell e're to my owne love unjust.

Ex.

Dor. She's gone; what vapour, which the flattering Sunne
Attracts to heaven, as to create a flarre,
And throw it a fading meteor to the earth,
Has falne like me: I am not yet growne ripe
For perfect forrow, but as a bubling brooke,
That fports and curles within its flowry Bankes,
Till the vaft fea devoure it, onely falling
Into the abyfie of michiefe; paffions furround
My intellectuall powers, only my heart,
Like to a rocky Island does advance
Above the fomy violence of the flood,
Its unmov'd head: love be my carefull guide,
Who failes 'gainst danger both of wind and tie.

Enter Bonivet, Laslantio, and Adorni.

Bon. Thanks good Adorni, we are much endeer'd

To your relation; this rich corfick wine

Erected our dull fpirits, and you shall

Command our service in as high and jocund

A Nature.

Ador. Sir, although I am
One that affects not the nice phrase of Court,
Having bin nurs'd in warre, yet I can frame
My selfe to imitation of what humour
Shall there, or any where appeare to be Worthy my laughter.

Bon. You have explain'd your knowledge, we who breath

Onely the aire of Genoa, and ne're tasted Forraigne behaviour, covet nothing more Than certaine knowledge of it, as 'tis proper to Complexions intellectuall to delight In novelties, your Spaniard as you say, Is of a staid, serious, and haughty garbe: Acts all his words with shrugs and gestures, kisses His hand away in kindnesse; is of dyet Sparing, will pick his teeth as formally

After an Orenge, or a clove of Garlicke, Which is his ordinary morfell, as he'd fed On Partridges or Pheafant.

Ador. 'Tis his grace
After his dinner Sir, and to confirme
Their most officious gravity, a Cashilian

Was for fome crime in Paris to be whipt.

In triumph through the streetes, and being admonished

To be more fwift of foote, fo [to] avoyd
The dreadfull lash the sooner, in scorne answer'd,
He rather would be flead alive, than breake
A Title of his gravity.

La. Much good

Doe it his patient shoulders: but Adorni, What thinke you of the French?

Ador. Very ayry people, who participate More fire than earth; yet generally good, And nobly disposition'd, something inclining

Ent. Corim.

To over-weening fancy——This Lady Tells my remembrance of a Comick scene, I once saw in their Theatre.

Bon. Adde it to

Your former courtesies, and expresse it.

Ador. Your entreaty

Is a command, if this grave Lady please,

To act the Lady I must court.

Cor. Why doe you thinke I cannot play the woman? I have plaid a womans part about twenty, twenty yeares agoe in a Court Masque, and the I say't as well as some o' them, & have bin courted too, But it is truth, I have a foolish quality as many more women are guilty of besides my selfe, I alwayes love them best, which slight me most, and scorne those that doe court mee: look you Signior, if't be a lovers part you are to act:

Take a black fpot or two, I can furnish you.
'Twill make your face more amorous, and appeare
More gracious in your Mistris eyes.

Ador. Stand faire Lady.

Cor. Tis your part to stand faire sir; doubt not my carriage—

O most rare man: sincerely, I shall love the French

The better while I live for this.

Ador. Acts furioufly.

Nay pray fir; gentlemen entreat the man To pacifie his wrath, tell him Ile love him, Rather than fee him rage thus.

Bon. He would have just reason to be mad indeed then, but now

The Mood is alter'd.

Ador. acis ut antea.

Cor. Excellently ravishing: this is of force
To make the hardest hearted Lady love him:
Can I intreat him but to teach my Cosen
Some of his French, he will for ever be engallanted.

Enter Eurione, and Frangipan.

Bon. Beautious Cosen, Y'ave mist the quaintest sport; honest Adorni You would endeare this Lady to you, would you Please to react it.

Ador. Nay, if you make me common once, farewell;

I am not for your company.

Cor. Pray fir a word or two; here is a gentleman,

Nay Nephew, though I fay't a toward young man, Vouchfafe him your acquaintance.

Ador. Will he fight, is he fouldier?

Cor. No truely fir, nor shall hee bee:

I would be loath to have my onely Cosen
Heated about the heart with lead; he's dull

Enough already: Frangipan come hither,

This gentleman will for my fake teach thee French.

Ador. For your fake reverent Madam I shall do't:

Sir please you walke, we will conferre on rudiments.

Cor. Come with him Coz: Sir, and you have occasion

To use me in a pleasure, stands within The ability of my performance, pray command,

You shall not be deny'd.

Ador. Come Signiors, will you walke? Ex. Eur. Cosen Bonwet.

I should be glad, after some minutes, to Enjoy your Company.

Bon. I shall attend your Ladyship.

Eur. Corimba what answer from Vitelli do I

Or in the killing rigour of his scorne Must I dye wretched.

Cor. Sincerely Madam,

You are too timorous of your owne deferts, Or else you durst not doubt, that he, or any You being so neat your selse, and drest as neatly As any Lady in the Court, should hazzard The reputation of his wit, by slighting Such an accomplish'd beauty.

Eur, You talke,

And play the cunning flatterer, to excuse Your negligence; but know affections fire Once kindled by desire, and blowne by thought

Into a heat, expires a thousand sighes, .
Which as loves smoak, like incense slyes to heaven,
While the light fire with nimble wings doe soare
To its owne spheare, true lovers hearts who cherish

The flame, till they to ashes burne, and perish-

Cor. Why Ladybird,

Are you so passionate, the gentleman

Is a kind gentleman, has all that may

Set forth a man; for when I told him how

Like a hurt Deare you wounded were with love,

Life how he leapt for joy, as if the selfe

Same arrow which struck you, had glanc'd on him.

And as a token of his love, hee fent you A bleeding heart in a Cornelion, which Bestrew me, most unfortunately I lost.

Enter Chrisea.

If Generall Dorua be within—Eurione

Ex. Cor.

I have beene feeking thee, how doft thou fifter? I must demand a question that concernes The fafety of your fame.

Eur. I reft

Secure in mine owne innocence, and no malice Can forge an accufation which can blemish My meanest thought with scandall.

Chri. I beleeve,

But know Eurione I am enform'd You doe affect Vitelli, and conjure you By the deare memory of our mother, tell me If the report be certaine.

Eur. Should I deny't,
My love would muster thousand blushes up

To invade my guilty Cheeks, I must confesse I love him so, as modesty and truth Afford me warrant.

Chri Tis ill done,
And childishly so easily to impart
The treasure of your liberty, to keeping
Of a neglected stranger.

Eur. His owne worth Deferves as noble knowledge here, as many Who borrow titular glory from the dust Of their forgotten Ancestours.

Chri. You defend him

Like a brave Championesse, as if you meant T'ingage your dearest pawne of life and honour In his protection.

Eur. Say I did, the even'ft,

Though most strict justice would allow as lawfull

My honourable purpose.

Chri. Fie, you are
Lead on too wildly by your fancy fifter,
It ill befits the greatnesse of your blood
To feeke to mixe its pure streame with a poore

Regardlesse River.

Eur. He appeares to me
Broad in his owne dimensions as the sea,
Cleare as a brooke, whose Christall lips salute
Onely the freshest medowes. such a Creature
That were some cunning painter to expresse
An Angell cloath'd in humane shape, he might
From his derive a patterne.

Chri. But suppose my fancy Should over-sway my judgement, to affect Vitelli; fure your manners would allow me, By willing resignation of your choyce, The priviledge of my buth-right.

Eur. Would you urge A claime so justly mine, because you view'd The light two yeares before me; no Chrisca. Love's an unlimited passion, that admits
No Ceremonious difference: this prerogative
Should Queenes endevour, their unvalued Dow-

Chri. Doe not flatter

Your fancy with this vaine conceite: Vitelli
Must be no more yours; Know I have enjoyn'd .

The Generall Dorsa to engage his friend, To imbrace my proffer'd love to him.

Eur. You strive.

Because you thinke my young and timerous flame Unapt t'incounter brave Vitellis heat; As cunning Nurses doe with froward Babes, Fright them into an appetite: but say All this were reall, thinke you Doria would So easily be perswaded to renownce His proper interest, and inthrall his friend To an unwilling flavery?

Chri By truth

He has impawn'd his honour to endeavor What I have utter'd, gentle Girle confider Loves unrefisted violence, and believe I would not have a rivall to usurpe A corner in the Kingdome of that heart Of which i'm soveraigne, so sarewell deere soule, Consider ont.

Eur. Confider ont, why this is fuch an act, Done by a cruell fifter, as shall taint That holy name with such a blacke reproach That should a thousand pious Virgins weepe, Rivers of teares, their most immaculate drops

Would not wash white her scandall haplesse girle, That in loves tempess wert but lately tost; And now recoverd in a calme art lost.

Enter Lactantia.

Last. Madam the Duke intreats your instant company.

Eur. I shall attend his pleasure, good Lastantio.

If you can meet my Cosen Bonives,

Desire him visite me.

Exut.

Enter Doria.

Dor. Noble Lactantio,
Y'are happily encounterd, I expected
My friend Vitelli here, this is his houre,
I wonder he is tardie.
Lact. Your Lordinip
Prevents the time with speed, or else Vitelli
Has some impediment by businesse, sir,

Enter Vitelli.

Y'are opportunely welcome to deliver Your owne excuse, I was about to stretch My invention for you. Vil. Noble friend, Your enemy had you ingagd your faith

Your enemy had you ingagd your faith To any personall meeting could expect you, But at the minute, reason may dispense Twixt us with such a nicety.

Last. Now your friends
Arriv'd, I must beg licence to depart,
I have some vrgent businesse.

Dor. Good Lactantio your time's your owne. Lact. I kisse your Lordships hand.

Exit.

Vii. Friend now wee're alone, I fafely may Speake my conjecture, I have read your lookes, And in their pensive Characters finde secret, Strange signes of sadnesse.

Dor. I am fad indeed, When my remembrance tells me I have only Verball affurance of your friendship.

Vit. Try me
By any attempt, whose danger does surpasse
The common path of daring, beet to snatch,
A siry boult when it from heaven comes wrap'd
In sheetes of lightning to afford true proofe
Of my affection, and with eager haste,
Such as inspires a husband to enjoy
His spouses virgine purity, ile runne
To the atchievement.

Dor. These are but protests
Such as be got by ceremony, proceed
Not from intensive zeale, yet ile experience
'The truth of your affection by a triall
Of such a noble and effective weight,
Which if you bravely doe support, you'l stand
As some tall Pyramid or Columne for
Your owne memoriall to tell after-times
The power and strength of friendship.

Vit. Pray nam't,
And 'twere a burden would orepresse the earth,
Ile be the able Atlas to sustaine
Heaven on my willing shoulders.

Dor. There is a Lady
In whose each eye sits fire, & on her cheek
Victorious beauty captive to her smiles
Dances in lovely triumph, one who emblemes
The glory of mortality in each looke,
Contracts the orbe of lusture to a glance,

114 The Ladies Priviledge.

Brandishes beames, whose purity dispence, Light more immaculate then the gorgeous east, Weares when the prostrate Indian does adore Its rising brightnesse, yet this wonder doates On you with such inevitable fervor That I in pitty of her sufferings come Tintreate you love her.

Vit. Whom my Lord !

Dor. You cannot

Appeare fo strangely stupid not to acknowledge
Creations miracle, when I point out
Her very figure you as well may seeme,
When the bleake North does with congealing blasts
Binde up the crissing streames in chaines of Ise,
Not to know Winter, ignorant of her
Who had she hiv'd when superstitious mists
Shaded the world, more groves of gammes had fam'd.

To her Divinest beauty, then to all The race of idle deities; its Chrisca, The saire Chrisca loves you.

Vit. The faire Chrifea, your Lordship's merry.

Dor. Doe you flight

What I deliver'd with that unfain'd zeale,
That penitents doe their prayers, I fay, Chrifea
A name whose every accent sweether sounds,
Then quires of Syrens sence bereaving notes,
Chrifea loves you infinitely above
Expressive termes; the Orators should strive
To paint her masculine sancy, and i'me bound
To pay this homage to her best content,
As to conjure you, by all sacred ties
Of honour, amity, and what else may serve
To inforce the indeerement with your noblest love
To gratise her fancy.

Vit. No perswasion
Can make me thinke this serious, good my Lord,
Doe not you love Chrisea?

Dor. More then a babe

Does the kind Nurse that feedes it with her blood,

More then I doe my quiet, or the joyes
Of ought but blest eternity; Vitelli,
No other argument can more convince,
Suspition should it doubt my love: but this
That to procure her peace, I have confinde
The greatnesse of my passion, and give up
To thy dispose, a Iewell which the earth
And sea should both unlade their hidden wealth,
Should not have purchas'd from me.

Vit. These are arts to pulle my conceits, my

I'me no such punie in the Crast of love,
That I want braine to finde this drift, which is
As obvious to me as your eyes—now you
Are home return'd victorious, big with praise,
Laden with titles that sit heavier on you
Then your seele Corslet in hot sight contemne,
Assimity with me, to whom y'ave heard
The saire Eurione has resign'd her heart,
And by this circumvention should I court
At your entreates her sister might pretend
A righteous cause, for an unjust revolt,
For were it otherwise, your temper could not Brooke your Chriseas change without a start
Into a sudden surv.

Dor. This language
I understand not, by my honour friend,
This iteration may disperse your doubt,
I doe agen conjure you by all right
Friendship can challenge in you to affect
Chrisca nobly, shall I have your answer?

Vit. Nay then my Lord,
Since you are ferious, freely I refume
The priviledge of my liberty; this body
I doe confesse your captive, and t'has sufferd
An honourable thraldome, but my minde
Remaines unbounded as the ayre or fire,

Are from their fpheares, Eurione has wone By the fubduing valor of her lookes, That in a field of fancy, not of blood, And ere another shall usurpe her right, In the defence ile dye her willing martyr.

Dor. I judg'd what ferious value
Your boasted friendship would retaine ith test,
Draw your bright weapon, know that I doe hate
Basenesse as much as cowardice: and since
You slight a Lady for whose pricelesse love
Kings might resigne their Crownes, and humbly fall
Like bare foot pilgrimes prostrate at the shrine
Of such a beauty, sure if in this sword,
Death has a residence your life shall sinde it,
And not survive to boast the cruell triumph
Of her resusals.

Vit. Sir your fword

Cannot excite a trembling in my blood,
The gliftring splendour cherishes my sight,
Like polish'd Chrystall, henceforth name of friend
Be no more known betwixt us then a dreame.
Thus I expire it, I may now regaine
My honour forfeited in the Generall cause
By this particular Combate.

Dor. Should my fate
Yield me the conquest, yet his death would not
Beget Chriseas quiet, but augment
Her griese and hate against me: stay, sorbeare,
I seele a palsie in my veines, and cannot
Manage this little instrument of death,
My sinews put on infancy agen
And have no vigor in them, oh Vitelli,
I am so full of passion, I have scarce
Roome left to vent a sigh, a mine of lead
Hangs on my heart, and with its weight has crack'd
The seeble courage.

Vit. Noble foule, his griefe Workes more compunction in me, than his fword Did fuddaine anger; could I grant what you Request, no brand-markt flave should fulfill Sooner his Masters most severe command. Than I would yours; but this abrogates all lawes Of friendships duty: if y'ave vowd this act, You may as fafely disanull the Oath. As should you in some desperate fury sweare To be your fathers murtherer.

Dor. Bid me first renounce My allegeance to my honour, fell my faith I owe my Native Country: my Vitelli I feele an humour in my braine, which strives For passage at mine eyes, wilt see me weepe? Confider friend, denying my request Thou dost undoe a Lady, who may claime The priviledge of all hearts: depriv'st the world Of fuch a jemme, that should old nature strive To frame her fecond, it would quite exhauft Her glorious treasury, then in her ruine: My life and honour's forfeited, think this, And were thy heart obdurate as a rocke Of Adamant, this thought joyn'd with my teares Would fooner than the blood of Goats dissolve it To gentle softnesse.

Your eyes are moving advocates, they speake Such an o're-flowing Language, that my love Then in its owne cause a most partiall Judge, Allowes my mercy freedome to pronounce Sentence on your fide: you have prevail'd, Ile ferve Chrifea, as her pleafure shall

Dispose my will and fortune

Dor. I beginne

To feele my spirits quicken, and my blood Receive its noble temper; deare Vitelli, Thy noblenesse does prompt thee to an act Shall write thy friendship higher in the lists Of facred amity, than mothers loves. Goe to my best Chrisea, she expects To know by thee the truth of my successe, Tell her I am more happy in her bliffe,

Than if I had enjoy'd her conflant love:
So leave me love, I may perhaps transgreffe
Man-hood agen, and shouldst thou see me weepe
Twice, thou wouldst judge my former slood of teares

A feigned passion.

Vi. Your Genius guard you; thus I apply Balme to his wounds, while I doe bleeding dye.

Ex.

Enter Bonwet.

Bon. Noble Generall,
I come to gratulate the happy choyse
Y'ave made in saire Chrisea, she's a Lady,
That though she were a stranger to my blood,
My judgement would allow as nich a vertue
As ever glorisi'd the sexe.

Dor. Twould be

A facrilegious errour not to admit
Your Character for truth, but in our loves
A thousand hidden causes doe produce
Alternate changes, my returne has settled
My thoughts on new resolves, and I must suite
My affections to them.

Bon. How? perhaps because
You are return'd triumphant with your bayes,
Growing upon your brow, you doe reject
The love before you su'd for, its not noble
So to abase a Lady, whose bright same,
Although untainted as a Christall rocke,
Must passe a popular censure, if you, who Did with such earnestnesse pretend her match
Should on the suddaine scorne it.

Dor. I'me not bound
To give you reasons why; but know my mind,
Which your contesting cannot alter's fixt
On what I have related.

Bon. I must then tell you'
You doe defame the opinion of that worth
The world does credit in you: this affront,
Should all her other friends sit idle gazers
On her disgrace, should stirre me to attempt
An ample satisfaction from your heart,
Though you had multitudes of greater glories
Heap'd on your head, or were defenc'd with legions
To affright me from the adventure.

Dor. Sir, your courage
Is juster than your quarrell, doe you think
I weare a sword onely for ornament;
And though our yeares declare us equalls, yet
My education was i'th' trade of warre.
Tis my profession to infranchise soules
From prisons of their slesh, and would be loath
Cause you have interest in Chriseas blood,
Your passion should betray you to the fury
Of my incensed wrath.

Bon. All discourse
Is tedious to me, sure the world's abus'd
With report of your valour, men who commit
Affronts they dare not answer, use excuse
In moderation of them, I expected
I should have met an adversary of you,
Of temper hot as lightning, and as bold
As Lyons vext with hunger, and I finde you
A tame degenerate Coward.

Dor. All respect
Of love and pitty hence: Beare up, my steele fight.

Has prickt your breaft; I would not have you dye Chriseas Martyr.

Bon. I've puld untimely ruine on mee, I'me hurt,

I feare to mortall danger: Noble Generall, See me conducted to Lactantos house,

The Ladies Priviledge.

There I shall get a Surgeon.

Dor. Noble young man,

Muster thy strongest spirits up: I am one
Of Fortunes pastimes; yesterday return'd,

Advanc'd to heaven by the peoples breath,

To day hurl'd downe into the abysse of death.

Actus Tertius.

Enter Chrifea, and Corimba.

Chri. Ame none yet from the Generall?

Cor. No infooth Madam: I protest your

If the continue in these suddaine fits,
Will so undoe her face, that all my art
Can never rectisit; shee weepes, as if
She might as easily be supply'd with eyes
As with new dressings, ile be sworne, I tooke
As hearty paines to cut a handsome heart;
And though I say't it was a pretty one
As e're was made of Tassay, to grace her Cheek,
And never trust me if I lye to you,
Her teares has wash'd her heart away.

Chr. Th' art still in these
Impertinent discourses: what's the cause
My sister is so prodigall of her griese,
To let thee see her vent it?

Cor. Why Madam, I have seene a Lady weepe, Besides your sister, and have wept my selfe too, I never shall forget the time; I could Een cry agen to thinke on't; twas at the death Of your sine little Iewell: never Lady Nurst such a dainty puppy, but hee's gone,

And farewell he; I will not give a rush For any woman cannot use her eyes With as much liberty as her tongue, these sooles, These loving Ideots men for three forc'd drops Will mollisse like wax, and be made apt For any impression.

Enter Vitelli.

Chr. Vitelli you are wellcome, I suppose Your businesse has been urgent, we expected Your presence sooner, howsoever now Tis grateful hither.

Cor. My young Lady shall Have notice of 's arrivall, perhaps his fight Will cheere her drooping spirits.

Еx.

Vit. Madam, my friend
The Generall, does by me tender his best
And truest service to you, he has sent me
Prompt, to sulfill the nicest poynt of duty
Your pleasure casts upon me.

Chri. Sir, the Generall is So just in his proceeding, I must ever Esteeme him truely Noble, though I should Banish him my affection.

Vtt. I could wish
The sweetnesse of your vertue would vouchsafe
To lay a reclamation of your love:
Had you but seene with what ambitious haste,
With what extreame perswasions he endeavour'd
The satisfaction of your will, you could not Fancy a change from one so worthy.

Chri. No? not to enjoy your felfe? Vit. Me Madam;
No equall eye can parallell my poore

No equall eye can parallell my poore Regardlesse merit, with the glorious worth Which does as farre transcend mine in desert, As't does in eminence of fortune.

Chri. Sir your mostesty

Extenuates your owne worthinesse, to bestow

A large addition on your friends, my judgement

Has ballane'd both, and has concluded which Ought to be held most noble, I doe honour True constancy in men, pray tell me sir, For it concernes me neerely, did you ever Fervently love my sister?

Vit. To include,

(All strength of humane zeale) as Doria does Adore your excellent beauty, with a heat Holy as soules in deepest fancy

Their fainted fellowes

Chri. And can you extingush
So great a flame so easily, can entreates,
So soone subdue your temper? if your truth
Be of this wavering quality, how shall I
Receive assurance of it!

Vit. The vow

I made, my friend secures it, thinke not Madam That, both, my parents with perswasive prayers, Could have enforc'd me violate my faith To saire Eurione, but when my friend, My honor'd friend to whom I owe my life, As tenant to his bounty, did in teares, A souldiers teares whose every drop prevailes More then a captive princesse, plead the loss Of his owne life, my gratitude did vanquish Passion, and forc'd me tear even from my soule Euriones affection.

Chri. You are just In your determination.

Enter Eurione.

Vit. Blesse me friendship,
And with thy white wings overshade my heart,
Or here descends a Saint will dispossess thee
Of the accustom'd shrine, a barke enclos'd,
Twixt two encountring tides is not more tost
Then I twixt striving passions, while a friend,
I cannot be a lover.

Eur. Vitelli

Am I in your opinion loft? my fifter Relates so sad a wonder, that if truth, I am undone for ever.

Vit. Harke she speakes too,

A tempting language; fuch was our first mothers voyce.

While she was innocent, deere Ladies would I could divide my selfe, for being one, I cannot on the Theater of my minde, Act both a friend and lover, that two names Of so intire affinity should occasion So manifest a dissension, in a soule That would be true yet is inforc'd, though loath, To forfest one, or to be false to both.

Chri. My expectation did not [Pre]sage this foftnesse in you, I had thought You had come furnish'd with a full resolve To act your friends request.

Vit. Yet I must needs

Speake in a cause so moving; Madam thinke

How much more noble us in you to save,

Then to destroy; behold three bleeding hearts

Imploring pitty from you, mine, your sisters,

And your adorer Dorras, which one word

Of yours would ransome from approaching death,

Oh be not sparing of that breath, 'twill sound

In the just eares of heaven more sweet then prayers

Offerd by Cloyster'd virgins, oh resume Your native charity, and sulfill my suite, And in requitall of that sacred grant, Time shall depend like summer on your brow, And your whole life be one continued youth. Such were the springs in Paradise, and when You passe to be a sharer in heavens blisse, Virgins and innocent lovers spotlesse teares, Hardned to pearle by the stronge heate of sighes, Shall be your monument.

Chri. This whole discourse Should you inlarge it to a volumne, cannot Alter my meanest thought, I only wish you As you are noble to respect your honour: That's all my answer.

Exit.

Eur. But doe you meane Vitelli, to performe what Dorsa has enjoyn'd you. I shall melt Vii. Into a willing pitty, if the flame Of friendship did not with its effectuall heat, Dry up loves moviture: deere Madam he That has commanded me this deathfull taske Claimes fuch a lawfull Interest in my life, That fpight of my affection, I must yield To his reliftlesse will: yet I will love you So far as honour gives me warrant, and Wish you the best of women, the best joyes Happinesse can impart to you farewell, 'Tis a befitting gratitude to give That life a being; by whose guist I live.

Exit.

Eur. Sorrowes flow high; griefe unto griefe fucceed,
 Wounds are more dangerous which doe inward bleed.

Exit.

Enter Adorni, and Frangipan.

Ador. Come let not this dishearten you, your French

Is a thing eafily gotten, and when you have it. As hard to shake it off, runnes in your blood, As 'twere your mother language, but there is An observation farre more necessary T' improve your judgement, still let your discourse Concerne the forraigne businesse, and be sure To applaud out-landish fashions, and take off From what is native, as if you shall heare Any commend the Genoa garbe, or state Answer in France, in Naples, or in Spaine, No matter where, to it be farre enough From hence, they are more politicke, more witty; Every way more deferving, this will speake Infinitely judicious, when to praise Our owne domesticke manners, is as if A man should praise himselfe, and be accounted A felfe concerted gul for 't. Fran. Very good,

This is a rule Ile put in practice I, Thanks to my inclination can speake ill Of my owne father signior.

Ador. Signion;

Still you betray your ignorance, why figuror,

Mounfieur has a farre more airy and harmonious found.

There's musicke in the letters, still polish your phrase

With particles of language, which till I've taught vou

Perfectly answer with a shrug or nod, Or any forraigne gesture, such a silence Will be esteem'd for gravity, and become you better Then volubility of speech does some
Whose tongues are gentlemen ushers to their wits,
Still going before it, and when you doe speake,
Let it not be, as now you doe of newes
Abroach ten daies before, and quite drunke of;
But what affaires are acted then in France,
What in the English Court and still remember
T' extoll 'hem infinitely, and if any answer
Comparatively with our owne a serious laughter,
Will not become you ill, to shew how much
You slight their error.

Frah. Better still, I like
This slighting humour infinitely, but how
If they should talke of our Italian dames,
I'me bound to be their Champion, for I've heard
Strangers report, and I hold their opinion,
Our Curtezans excell all other Nations.

Ador That shew'd those strangers judgements, and confirm'd

What I would have you understand in England,
Where publicke houses are prohibited
There are the bravest Lasses, here some Donfella
That was the last night yours, shall for two Ducats
To morrow be a Saylers—when there
Your Citizens wives, girles fresh as ayre, and wholsome

As pretious Candy wives will meet their Gamsters, At a convenient Taverne, rob their husbands Without a scruple, and supply their friends, While the good innocent Cuckolds pay a price For their owne horning

Fran. Excellent, excellent Genoa, I doe defie thy costive girles, Ile henceforth love these English sparkes of gold: Would I were there. it should goe hard but I Would graft on their Aldermens Coxecombs.

Ador. Th' are grafted fast already sir, besides They ne're get Children, but their Hench boyes on Their Sergeants wives, after some City feast, When the provoking spirit of White broath, and Custard enslames their blood: what Genoa Burgesse

Dares be fo boldly courag'd: Ile tell you,
And marke how base and fordid it appeares
To have our Cellers stuff'd with Corsike Wines:
Yet for this foolish sinne cald Temperance,
Tantalize, and nere taste it, while your Dutch,
Your noble-spirited German will carrouse
A score of Goblets to provoke this stomacke
To's bread and Butter; doe nothing but by discreete

Counsell of drinke, not match his daughter to A man he sees not drunke first, scarce say's prayers Till he be full of liquor, which enslames The minde to generous actions.

Fran. I commend 'hem,
And will be glad to mitate.
Ador. Your English

Deferves as large applause, who to say truth, Out-drinks the Dutch, as is the common proverb, The Dutch-man drinks his buttons off, the English Doublet and all away, then marke their carriage. If two fall out and strike, and be by company Parted; though one weares in his face the badge Of his dishonour, which excites him to As brave revenge, not daunts him. for he'll straight Call out his enemy to a single Duell, Scorning his life; contemning the Lands lawes, Which doe forbid those combats, and ne're part Till one be slaine, and the survivour sure As death to hang for 't.

Fran. Excellent, I love a man that cares not for hanging.

Ador. Then to their further glory, which takes

All the difgrace of halter, they are fure Ere they be fcarce cold, to be Chronicled In excellent new Ballads, which being fung Ith' streets 'mong boyes and girles, Colliers, and Carmen.

Are bought as great memorialls of their fames, Which to perpetuate, they are commonly fluck up With as great triumph in the tipling houses, As they were fcutchions.

Fran. Better: yet I'de give

A hundred Ducats to be chronicled

In such a historical Canto: who composes them ! Ador. They have their special Poets for that purpole

Such as still drinke small Beere, and so are apt fuit out lamentable stuffe; then for their cloathes

They hate a cut domesticke, but imitate The French precifely gallants, weare their long Parisian Breeches, with five poynts at knees,

Whose tagges concurring with their harmonious fourres

Afford rare musicke; then have they Doublets So short ith' waste, they seeme as 'twere begot Vpon their Doublets by their Cloakes, which to fave fluffe

Are but a yeares growth longer than their skirts; And all this magazine of device is furnish'd By your French Tayler: what Country man is yours?

Fran. A Genoese.

Ador. Fie, change him Monsieur. You have heard a Spanish Count's Lately arriv'd, without any advice, how'd you falute him 1

Fran. Thus fir, after our Italian fashion.

Ador. That's too vulgar:

You must accost him thus with a state face, As if your beard had beene turn'd up that morning By advice of all the Barbers in the City, As you had dreft you in a Looking-glaffe. Proper to none but the Dukes privy Counsellors:

Pronounce your Befolas manos with a grace, As if you were the fonne and heire, apparant To th' Adelantado of Caflile.

Enter Lactantio.

Last. Adorni, this is no time for mirth, Your noble General has flain Lord Bonivat, And for the act is a prisoner.

Ador. Dares the state bereave him of his liberty.

Without whose most unwearied valour,

It had beene betray'd to flavery?

Lac. You know Lord Bonwets alliance to the Ador. Allyance, death a thousand Bonivets,

And Dukes and States, weigh not

A scruple poys'd with his full worth.

Lac. He's to be tryed ith' morning without noyfe,

For feare of mutiny, and tis suppos'd That if some virgin Lady doe not claime

Her priviledge, and begge his life, he'll fuffer.

Fran. If the maid that begges must be above fifteene,

Tis shrewdly doubted where she'll be found.

Ador. All our virgins ought, if they have vertue, to contend

For fuch a glory; but if all be fqueamish,

May all the daughters of our best Burgers runne

Away with fouldiers, and become Sutlers wives.

Fran. Elfe when they have a masculine itch upon 'hem,

And would taste man, may they be wed to Eunuchs.

Last. Or else be forc'd to keepe their maiden-heads

Till they be musty and not marchantable

To younger brothers with additions of wealthy por-

Fran. May they when they would strive to mend their faces to allure a fuitor, want paint and blackepatches to stoppe the Crannies of their Cheekes; may their Pomatum bee muxt with Hogs-grease, that they may be abominable even in the nose of Iewes: may the green-sicknesse raigne in their bloods, and may they be debar'd of oate-meale, and clay-wall, and fall to Rats-bane.

Ador. May their parents turne most precise precisians,

And forbid em the fight of plays, or may they never

Dance unlesse be to a bag-pipe or a Crowd.

Fran. May they want filkes for gownes, and if they feeke

Supply from Naples, let them insteed be furnish'd With their Disease, may Millaners breake and Feather men.

May my Aunt dye fuddenly, and bury with her All her devifes; may there be no Earth

Found to make looking-glasses, that they come to use of

Kitchen-wenches, dresse their heads by the reflexion of a

Paile of water, or in a pewter chamber vessell.

Ador. Lactantio, let's go wayte the Generall
In prison, 'twould be base should we neglect him
In his extremity.

Exeunt.

Enter Doria, and Sabelli.

Dor. Is it confirm'd hee's dead?
Sab. The generall voyce
Divulges fo ith' City; and the Duke
Has fent an order which commands you forth
I'th morning to your tryall: my deare Lord
I hope the service you have done the State

Abroad, will here at home secure your life From the Lawes violent Rigour.

Dor. Yes poore boy,
If thou mightst be thy masters judge Sabelli,
I am at the period of my fate, and would not
Have thee a sad spectator of my fall
At home, whom thou so oft hast waited on
Abroad in triumph, therefore gentle heart,
Returne home to thy mother, and survive

To serve a happier master.

Sab. My noble Lord Have I so often followed you, when death Attended on each step, when every hurt That scar'd your noble body. I have wish'd Imprinted on my flesh, and with my teares. Even drown'd the purple deluge of your wounds. That as my truth and loyalties reward. I must be turn'd away unkindly, when My last and justest service might declare My zeale to you my master; Oh sir, You more afflict my innocence with these words, Then if fad truth had brought me the report Of my owne mothers funerall, and should you Enforce me leave you, the fucceeding care, And labour of my life should be consum'd In a perpetuall weeping.

Dor. Good Sabelli

Cease this afflicting language, left I grow As childish as thy selfe, and burst into teares To beare thee company.

Sab. Befides my Lord,
When your bleft foule does on immortall wings
Arrive at heaven who shall attend it there,
The Saints and Angels will esteeme themselves
Worthy to be your sellowes, while my poore
And humble Ghost would reckon it a blisse
To waite on you, as carefully as when
We liv'd on earth together, deere my Lord,
Let me dy with you, death and I have beene

Play-fellowes these many yeares, he'l only bring me To rest as pleasing to my sence as sleepe After a tedious watching

Dor. This kinde passion
Shakes my most masculine temper; heere Sabelli
Accept this Gold, these Iewells, as the last
Gift of thy penshing Lord, thou shalt accept 'em;
If the law doe not passe upon my life,
Ile send for thee agen, I prethee leave me,
I would be private, and thy presence does
Disturbe my serious thoughts.

Sab. Nay then tis time

For me the wretched'ft foule on earth to take
My lafting farewell of you; all the joyes
Of bleft eternity in flead of my
Defertlesse fervice; waite upon your life;
You ne're shall view your boy agen, for sure
If your light be extinguish'd, my weake slame
Cannot continue burning; give me licence
To kisse your honour'd hand, and to let fall
A parting drop or two: and now sarewell
For ever noble Lord: that greese appears most true,
That's writ in blood as well as teares. [Adieu.]

Exit.

Dor. Poore boy; I have not yet deferv'd so ill But my untimely fate excites some putty.

Enter Adorni, Laclantio, and Frangipan.

Adorni thou art come to fee the last And greatest of thy Generalls actions, Which like a cunning and well mannag'd scene, Not till the period will disclose the plot Of my lifes Tragedy.

Ador. Your life my Lord;
Death dare not venture to invade it, and
The flate as foone will call the enemy

Into their City, as pretend the least Danger to their supporting Columne, which Should it but shake, it might dismantle their Best Bulwarkes, burne their Navy, and surrender Themselves to present slavery.

Lact. The Duke,

Though he did hold his kinfman deere, will value The publique good before his private ruine.

Fran. Let the Duke doe his worst, and all the state

Stand on Ponthos, I can fetch a Lady Of excellent quality shall beg your Lordship, Ile make her doo't.

Ador. Nay, should all fayle you fir, Should the States angers, the Dukes partiall sentence.

The peoples malice bandy to furprize
The treasure of your life; know you have friends
Would fixe the heads of halfe the Towne upon
Their Lances poynts, ere your least drop of blood
Should be diminished.

Dor. Gentlemen, I thank you
For all your loves. but know the shape of Death
Is not so ugly to me, but if justice
Contract me to the monster, I shall court it
As 'twere some beauteous Bride; and thank the Axe
That like the Priess, unites me to a Spouse
That will not play the woman and revolt.
Come Gentlemen let's in, brave soules doe hate,
To be dejected by the sorce of Fate.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Chrisea, Eurione, Vitelli.

Chri. Am very forry that his Fate has cast Such a disastrous chance upon his Life: But his desert will blunt the edge of justice, And mitigate the severity, which would Question the safety of his Life.

Vit. Tis in your mercy
To dash the Lawes proceedings, gracious Madam,
The Priviledge that our Country gives your Sexe,
Can hope for no imployment, that will rayse
A greater Trophee to your fame, then this
To ransome him, whose constancy and truth
Exceeds all boast of Stories.

Eur. You'l redeeme
The opinion of your piety, which scandall,
Should you omit this just and righteous taske,
Would blast with blackest infamy.

Chri. You plead
In your owne cause, not his, t'does not beseem
My modesty to interpose my selse
In that which nought concernes me.

Vit. Is his life
Of fuch a triviall value in your thoughts,
That you effective not worthy your intreats,
To fav't from killing, ruine, facred love,

Thou miracle of Nature, and delight Of all who know humanity with some Religious arrow pierce her slinty breast, Some pious shaft, on whose subduing point Pitty and amorous softnesse gently sit, Reduce this straying Schismaticke to the first Vnspotted purenesse of her constant faith, And we will pay a thousand clouds of sighes, As incense to thy Altars.

Eur. Offer up

Miriads of virgin vowes and with our teares Extinguish all uregular flames that taint Thy holy fires.

Vit. Oh Madam

What heart io barbarous, does not at loves fmiles

Put off the native fiercenesse, beasts with beasts, Observe his lawes; the Lyon whose big breath Affinghts the trembling people of the woods, Were his hoarse accents to be understood, They would appeare to be affections groves. The Nightingale that on lascivious wings Flies from the poplar to the trembling Beech, And on each bough chaunts melancholy notes. Had he a humane utterance, would proclaime. Those pensive straines, the musicke of his love; And can yee be lesse sensible of a power, That is so great, then creatures bard the use Offscred reason, and discourse?

With teares; Vitelli you mistake, your friend Values not at so deere a rate his life, As to receive a being tributary
To my unask'd entreats, besides I should Envy the states prerogative, whose mercy Is in remitting his unwilling fault, But a becomming thankesulnesse, and should Be censur'd, as too partiall to my owne Affection should I strive to be his wife,

Whose hand is purpled with the innocent blood Of my late murdered kiniman.

Eur. This concernes As neerely me as you, but by just truth, Though I'me ingag'd by my particular choyce To my Vitelli, were I fure the Generall Would not contemne my offer, and so blast My future fame, I would disclaime all tyes

Of former fancy; and implore his fafety. Vit. This is a sweetnesse

Which I cold wish you, what has begot This strange desertion of your faith, true love, Being once receiv'd into the foule converts Into its very effence, does become The same eternall substance, can you then Teare from the tender Cabinet of your breft Your very heart? this cruelty exceeds The depth of tyranny; but rest assurd, If Doria suffer by your proud contempt, I'me freed then from my promise, and will fooner

Warme an empoyloning Scorpion in my armes, Then yeeld my meanest thought to you who are By evident circumstance, though not by fact, My friend the Generalls murdreffe.

Chri. This Vitelli

Is not a meanes to winne me to your friend, But more avert me from him, it inflames My minde with holier fire to Court your love; There is an evident beauty in your foule, Equall to truest honor, I will cherish This bravery in you, if your masculine sancy Engages you thus constant, to a friend, You'l be a loyall husband, fare you well, Be still thus noble, and be happy.

Rxit.

Eur. My fifter Has loft all fence of pitty; deere Vitelli, There is no wretchednesse oppressing earth Equall to ours, love thus the Tyrant playes, Afflicting innocence by unufuall waies.

Exeunt.

Enter Doria as a prisoner, Lactantio, Adorni, to them Trivulci, Senators, Officers, and Attendants.

Akor. Tis like your felfe my noble Lord, but fee

The Duke approaching, let your foule expect An equal hearing.

Offic. Beare backe, roome for the Duke and Senate. what Cuckold's that would have his Coxcombe broake?

beare backe there.

Triv. Cite in the prisoner.

Offic. Hee's here my Lord.

Tri. I'me forry that

You for whose head the gratitude of the state
Decreed triumphant bayes should be enforc'd
To stand here a delinquent, but the law
Must as a streight and uncorrupted streame
Enjoy its usuall freedome, my Lords,
We are not met here to arraigne a prisoner,
Whose guilt does speake his sentence, but a person

Not only most unblemish'd in his same, But one to whom our country owes its life: Who with his dearest blood has balm'd the wounds

Which mischiefes giant-off-springs, raysing warre, Cut in the bosome of the common-wealth.

Sen. We all confesse his worth.

Tri. Yet this brave youth,
This patron of our hiberty, all his honours,
His blood and titles, his defensive bayes

(That would have guarded his victorious front From blafts of lightning) laid afide, is come To tender fatisfaction to the lawes, He has offended, and fince judgement is The immediate act of Justice, it must passe To save impartial censure on his his, As on the wretched'st malefactors; for His former ments cannot take away His present sault; for who ere is guilty Vindoes the priviledge of his desert and blood; For if great men offending passe unpunish'd, The common people who doe use to sinne, By their example searelesse, will runne on Into licencious wickednesse.

Sen. Your grace delivers
The intention of the state, no oracle
Could have explain'd the meaning of our lawes
With more integrity.

Tri. Yet my good Lords, I speake not this, that my particular vengeance, Because he slew my kinsman, has the least Ayme at his life, which I would strive to cherish As my owne health, or as the Cities peace, For Magistrates ought to behold their crimes, Not the committers, as the Poets faine Of wife Tyrefias, to want eyes, and only Have feeing understanding, for a judge Is guilty of the fault he does not punish, And if rewards and triumphs doe adorne Deferts tis just that shame and punishments Should wait on vices, and how much more worthy

The person is that acts them, so farre sharper Should be the penalty inflicted on him.

Sen. And when the law Vies its utmost rigor, tis the crime, And not the man it sentences.

Tri. In briefe We must

Decline his merit, and forget

Our gratitude, and fince his hand is dipt In civill blood, his life must expiat what His arme unfortunately committed.

Dor. My Lords,

The fervices which I have done the state,
Were but my naturall duty, I atchiev'd 'em
To gaine me fame and glory, and you safety, and Should esteeme them Traytors to honour, if their intercession

Be a protection for my crimes, I meane not To plead to fave a dif-respected life, Cause I seare death, a sea incompass'd rocke Is not lesse timerous of the assaulting waves, Then I of the grimme monster, but there is A same surviving which I would be loath, Should tell posterity I tamely yeelded My head to th' Axe, and dyed because my spirit Durst not desire to live to quit this scandall, I hope what I can urge in my desence Shall have indifferent hearing.

Tri. Speake freely.

Dor. Know then my intention
Is not by excuse to extenuate my fact,
Which I confesse most horrid, and would pay
A thousand showers of forrow, could this hand
Reedise that goodly frame of slesh
Which it demolisht, but my pricelesse same,
In whose deere cause I slew him, will to justice
Boldly proclaime, I did no more then what
The truth I owe my reputation tells me,
Was right in poynt of honour.

Tri. But the law

Does difallow it as unjust, and that

Must be your judge, and not that idle breath

Which you abusively terms honor.

Dor. Your lawes cannot without partiality pronounce

Iudgement against me, for they doe acquit That man of guilt that to defend his life Is forc'd to flay his enemy; my act Carries the same condition, since my same, Whose safety urg'd me to kill him, is my life, My immortall life, as farre transcending this As the soule does the body, for the sword, Returnes that to its primitive matter dust, And there it rests forgotten, but a wound Strucke upon reputation, leaves a brand, So selfe dissured is dishonors guilt, Even to posterity, and does revive After t' has sufferd martyrdome.

Sen. Yet this
Cannot excuse your fact, for civill reason
Allowes a reparation for the losse
Of fame, but gives no man a lawfull licence
To fnatch the priviledge from the hands of justice.

Which would dispose it equally.

Dor. This strictnesse
Destroyes all right of manhood, since a coward
May fearefully relying on this sufferage
Of Law affront even valors selfe, consider
That the most cunning Pilot cannot steere
Mans brittle vessell 'twixt these dangerous Rocks
Of law and honor fasely, sayle by this,
And on that suffer shipwracke, for suppose
I had with patience borne this scandalous name

Of a degenerate coward, I not only
Had nip'd the budding valor of my youth,
As with a killing frost, but left a shame
Inherent to our family, difgrac'd
My noble fathers memory, defam'd
Nay cowarded my Ancestors, whose dust,
Would 'a broke through the Marbles, to revenge

To me this fatall infamy.

Ador. Well urg'd, and resolutely. Dor. Nay more, your selves

That hate the deed being done, would have detested

The doer worse had it not beene perform'd Withdrawne my chardge ith' army; as from one Protested for a coward, I might then Have abjur'd the trade of warre, in which I have beene nurs'd.

Yet for preserving this unvalued jemme Of pretious honour that hangs on my soule, Like a well polish'd Iewell in the eare, Of the exactest beauty, must I suffer The laws sterne rigor.

Tri. Sir I should refute

With circumstance your wrong opinion, but in briefe.

Religious conscience, utterly disclaimes An act so barbarous to take man's life. Is to destroy Heavens Image, and if those Are held as Traytors, and the law inflicts Severest tortures on them, who deface The stamps of Princes in their covne, can they Appeare, as guiltlesse whose rude hands disgrace The great Creators Image, and commit Treason 'gainst awfull nature; Oh my Lord Collect your ferious temper, and put off The overweening fantalies of youth, Confider what a vaine deluding breath Is reputation, if compar'd with life, Thinke that an idle, or detracting word May by a faire submission (which our lawes Of honor doe require it will enforce) Be wash'd away, but the red guilt of blood Sticks as a blacke infection to the foule, That like an Æthiop cannot be wash'd white. Thinke upon this, and know I must with griefe Pronounce your fatall fentence.

A shout within. Enter Corimba and Frangipan.

Fran. Doe you heare Generall, Ile tell you newes, you were in geopardy to have had your little weafon flit; but I pronounce
The happy word, be fafe; this peece of beauty
By my perswasions does intend to take
The edge of law off, and become your wife,
True and inseparable.

Cor. With reverence to this presence, my good Lords.

Know that I come not urg'd by heate of youth. Fran. Tis true Ile bear her witnesse.

Cor. Or any wanton or unchast defire
To beg this gentleman for my husband, neither
To rasse my selse a fortune by the match,
But mov'd in charity, and provok'd in minde,
With pitty to behold a man so proper,
Brought to an end untimely, by a death
So scandalous to honour as the Axe,
I come to crave our priviledge, and desire him
For my most lawfull husband.

Tri. Gentle mayd
You piety does prompt you to an act
That shall engage your country to erect
A statue to your memory, though I could not
Dispence with justice, yet since there's a meanes
Without the lawes infringement, to preserve him,
I doe rejoyce as much as if my sonne
Had scap'd apparant danger: goe on and prosper
In your designe.

Dor. Doe you thinke
Because I pleaded for my honours life,
I doate so much upon this idle breath,
As to preserv't with infamy, dispose
This womanish priviledge to submissive slaves.

Know that I hate a being that depends Upon anothers bounty more then death, At which my foule does, like an Eagle stretch Its silver wings, and ore the monsters head Will make flight at heaven; pray sir proceed To judgement suddenly, delay begets More tortors in me then your sentence.

Cor. What doe you meane fir, pray let me under-

ftand you

Better, looke upon me, I am no woman to be flighted.

Fra. She's not asham'd to shew her face, marry her Uncle, that I may call you fo.

Sen. To wed this figure, is a farre greater punishment then Death.

Ador. Nere stand on tearmes, but marry her, and free your selfe, and trust to me, you shall not want a mistresse has better colours in her sace.

Dor. Corimba,

I'me much engag'd to your officious hafte,
And pay you many thankes, conceive not that
I doe contemne your person or dislike
The meannesse of your match, for were your beauty

Created for a miracle, and adorn'd
With the addition of a fortune ampler,
Then that perfection, I should crave a licence
To tell your modesty I am prepar'd
Rather for death then Nuptialls, and no strength
Of prayers and beauty, shall have power to tempt
me

From my fixt refolution.

Tra. This is madnesse

Not courage Dorsa.

Cor. Sir I must tell you
You know not how to use a woman rightly,
Perhaps tis bashfulnesse, take courage sir,
I have reserved my deere virginity
This sifty yeares for such a pious purpose,

And should you slight me now, I should forswear

Good purposes hereaster: gentlemen perswade him, Sure he cannot chuse but melt

At your entreaties.

Tri. Will you then pull your ruine on; that feeks

Thus easily to flye from you; Iustice calls
On me to give your fentence—new interruptions

Recorders. Enter Vitelli, and Sabelli, as a Lady. Virgins.

It is the voyce of musicke, and presages An Omen as harmonious as its notes, Approach faire troops of Virgins, here's subject, Fit for your maiden pity.

Cor. Tis time for mee to take my farewell, these may bee beauties, perhaps my Lady may bee one, adiew sir; you may be offer'd worse.

Ex. Cor. and Fran.

Sab. My honour'd Lord,
The charity I owe my native country,
That in the ruine of this brave young man,
Would fuffer infinitly, has forc'd us strive
With earely zeale first to present our duties
For his redemption, 'mong ten thousand Virgins
That would attempt it, and my true affection
Has wonne this favour from my fellowes, that
To me they yield their interest, which I claime
As my desir'd prerogative.

Tri. Tis an act

The State will thanke you for; unvaile your felfe. That we may know to whom we owe our gratitude, A most excelling beauty, such an eye
Would tempt religious coldnesse to a slame,
Thaw Ages chilly frost, at such a cheeke
The Spring might take a patterne to create,
A most accomplish'd freshnesse; in her looks,
Are modest signes of innocence, such as Saints
Weare in their liveliest countersets: Doria, here
A Lady begs you, whom if you resuse,
The times would blacke you with the hatefull title
Of your owne wisfull murther; take her to you
And live a fortunate husband.

Dor. Noble maid,
My mifery is fo extreame a finne,
It cannot meet your bounty without breach
Of vowes; which should I violate, would pull
Eternall torments on me; keep your beauty
For one whose soule, free as the ayre he breaths,
Can yield a mutuall fancy to your slame,
And not destroy his honour, for your goodnesse
Since my expir'd date, cannot yield you thanks
Worthy the boundlesse ment of your love,
If there can be a gratitude after death
Express'd by prayers, my soule in heaven shall pay it

To your kind charity. Sab Oh my Lord,

I did expect this answer, my poore worth Cannot deserve your value; yet there is

A constant purity in my thoughts, that intend

So much of Blisse, that had your fafety no Dependance on my fuit, it would be deem'd Most cruell to contemne me, I have lov'd you These many yeares; wish'd you as many glories As I have number'd dayes, have vow'd I never Will marry any man, but your blest selse my Lord, Should you neglect the justnesse of my request, Besides the danger waiting on your life, A thousand Virgins, whose unspotted prayers

Like hosts of guardian Angels, would have borne You on their wings to heaven, will for my take Convert their zeale to curses, and in teares Of anguish drowne your memory.

Vit. Why friend, this is

Such an o're-weening passion, as does question

The soundnesse of your judgement, fills the world

With a concert you dye; because your feares

Dare not accept of lise: Besides your Mistris,

To whom you would so strictly keepe your faith,

Does so much scorne your constancy, that no

Entreats could move her pitty undertake

This honourable imployment.

Tri. Doe it with speedy diligence.

Dor. Her causelesse frailty
Shall more confirme my truth:
My Noble Lord pronounce
My happy sentence, 'twill be welcome to me
As charming harmony, and swell my brest
With more than humane pleasure.

Enter Priest & Executioner.

Tri. Are you come? approach,
Behold this Executioner, and this Priest,
This is to wed you to destruction, that
To this rich Mine of purity: your choyse
May accept either: if you fixe on this,
Besides your owne redemption, you enjoy
A Lady, who may clayme as many hearts
As she has vertuous thoughts; but leane to that,
Your Spring returnes unpittyed, to the rude
Armes of perpetuall winter, that will freeze you
To a ne're melting Isicle, be suddaine,
And wise in your election.

Dor. Tis but vaine:

A Saint may fooner be o're-come to fell His native Piety: come thou grim man, Thou art to me more lovely then the face of perfect. Beauty · Do thy office, it will free me
From these perplexities.

Sab. Well my Lord,

Since I'me unworthy to enjoy in life
Your faire fociety, my foule shall hast
To waite on you to death, there is no blisse
Without your presence, since you will not have Mercy on your owne life, by your example
Ile be as harsh to mine, Ile goe
Before you to the other world,
And be your lov'd Gholas Harbenger.

Tri. Hold, hold the Lady——
Sab. Let no hand prefume
To feize me, for the meanest touch that shall Endeavour to prevent my will
Shall urge my speedier ruine: Good my Lord,
Shall I have answer! I would fayne be going
On my long journy.

Dor. I'me confounded
In my imagination. I must yield,
You have enforc'd a benefit upon me, I
Can hardly thank you for, yet I will try
To love you as my wife; that I were lost
In Clouds of black forgetfulnesse.

Tri. My Lord, Your pardon's feal'd as foone as by the Priest You are conjoyn'd in marriage: Ile not leave you Till't be folemniz'd, Hymen light thy Pine,

Deaths tapers fade at the cleare flame of thine.

Exeunt.

The end of the fourth Act.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Trivulci, Doria, Sabelli, Adorni, Prieft and Virgins.

Tri. Is the Priest prepar'd
For his Hymne after Nuptialls, and the virgins
Ready to gratulate the Bride, and Bridegroome
With the appoynted dance!
Aaor. The Priest I thinke
Has the song persect, but it is a question
Among the wisest, whether in the City
There be seven Virgins to be sound to surnish
The dance as't should be; but you must accept them

Recorders.

With all their faults; this musicke speaks their enterance.

Enter Virgins.

Song.

Riumphe appeare, Hymen invites
Thee to wait upon this feaft,
Mixe thy joyes with his delights,
'Tis the Generall is chiefe gueft.

Bid the Drumme not leave to teach,
The Souldiers fainting heart to beate,
Nor warres loud musicke Canon cease,
Breasts with deathfull fire to heate.
Thy waving Ensignes in the aire display,
The Generall lives, tis triumphes Holyday.

Come bright vertues that reside
In heaven, as in your proper spheare,
Though all contain'd in the saire bride,
Chassity doe thou sirst appear,
With Temperance and innocent grace,
Rose-colourd Modesty and truth,
Dance harmlesse measures in this place,
With health, and a perpetuall youth:
And all your Virgin Trophies bring away,
To grace these Nuptualls, Triumphs Holyday.

A Dance.

Tri. You have our hearty thanks, and we shall study

To give you faire requitall; come my Lord Exect your drowsie spirits, let your soule Dance ayry measures in your jocund breast; This is a day on which each Bridegroome ought To weare no earth about him; ayre and fire Are Hymens proper elements, your mirth Ought to insuse into your froncke guests, An humour apt for revelling and sport: Your disposition is more dull, than if You were to be chiese mourner at a Coarse For shame shake off this sadnesse.

Ador. It becomes you To fay truth fcurvily, I doe not like it, You looke as if y'ad lost some victorie, Of which your hope had an affurance: Shall I tell your Lordship
A very pleasant story:

Enter Vitelli.

Dor. It must be,

If it be delightfull to me, a discourse
Of some quicke meanes to free me from this cruell
Oppressive weight of siesh, which does entombe
My martyr'd soule, that like to sulphury fire
Hid in a Mountains entrayles, strives to burst
The prison, and siye upwards, it must needs
Be a sad wedding, when the Bridegroome weares
His Nuptiall livery on his eyes in teares.

Vit. Friend, this is
A passion too esseminate for a heart
Endu'd with manly courage; things pass helpe
Should be pass thought, your sadnesse casts a Cloud
Upon the lustre of this Ladyes looks,
You make her dimme the brightnesse of her eyes
With unbecomming teares, if you continue
This strange distraction.

Sab. Alas my Lord,
Let me participate your cause of sorrow,
And be a willing partner in your griese,
Which like a violent Current that o're-slowes
The neighbouring fields and medowes in its rage,
Into two streames divided, smoothly runnes,
Kissing with calme lips the imprisoning banks,
Would, though too mighty for you, when my soule
Should vent a part of it, be milde, and passe
Away without disturbance of your peace,
Which to procure I would even burst my heart
With sighes devoted to your quiet, and Become a loving sountaine by my teares
Shed without intermission.

Dor. Gentle Lady,

I am at fuch an enmity with fate, Makes me incapable of ought but griefe, But I shall study to declare how much

Enter Eurione, Chrisea, Corim. Lact. & Bon.

I am indebted to your care—good heaven
Send downe tome Angell to protect my heart,
Or my religion will fcarce stay my hand,
For acting wilfull violence on my life,
I have suckt poyson from her eyes, that will
Like to juyce of Hemlocke drowne my soule
In a forgetfull Lethargy, or oppresse
My temperate faculties with madnesse.

The Cosen ware welcome know this verti

Trz. Cofen y'are welcome, know this vertuous Lady

Who has redeem'd the Generall.

Chri. Sir.

Ime come to gratulate your beauteous bride,

And wish you joyes immortall.

Sab. I hope Madam,

My innocence has gin you no offence, That you refuse me, being a stranger to you, The Ceremonious wishes, which pertaine

To new made Brides, and onely doe conferre them

Vpon my Lord.

Chri. Your happinesse already
Is so superlative, I cannot thinke
A new addition to it, you enjoy
The very summe of fortune in your match,
To such a noble and illustrious husband.
I can no longer hold my passion in,
These walls of slesh
Are not of strength sufficient to contayne
My big swolne heart: My Lords behold a creature
So infinitely wretched, I deserve not
The meaness shew of pitty, who have, like

A filly merchant, trifled away a jemme,
The darling of the quarry, loft a love
By my too foolish nicenesse, to regaine
Whose forfeiture I would lay downe my life:
But he is gone for ever, and I lest
A pittious spectacle for the reproach
And scorne of wifer women.

Eur. Is this possible?
Was all her passion to Vitelli seign'd?
My hopes recover life agen.
Tri. Why Chrisea.

Whence fprings this passionate fury

Chri. Oh my Lord,
When you shall heare it, you will sigh for me,
And shed a charitable teare, at thought
Of my unkinde disaster: fir my Justice
Cannot accuse your constancy, which stood
In the first tryall of your love, as fast
And spotlesse as an Alablaster rocke,
That had it but persisted in that height
Of honourable loyalty, your glory
Had been advanc'd to heaven, as the fix't starre,
To guid all lovers through the rough
Seas of affection.

Vit. This taxation Cannot be just from you, who did enforce The fad revolt upon him.

Dor. Is there in heaven
No friendly boult left that will strike this frame
Into the center, and set free a wretch
(So overgrowne with misery) from life,
That death would be a comfort above health,
Or any worldly blessing, may time blot
My name out of his Booke, that such a Prodigy
May not affinght succession, nor sticke
Like an orespreading Leprose upon
The beautious face of manhood.

Chri. Oh my Lord,

Each griefe of which y'are fensible, is mine,
And not your torment, every figh you breath
Is an afflicting motion, expir'd
By my vext spirit, and if you could weepe,
Each drop would be my blood, who am the spring
Of the whole flood of forrow; oh forgive
The too exceeding honor of my love,
I would have had you for your perfect truth
So glorious; your loyalty should not
For preservation of your fame, have needed
To adopt a statue for its heire, or builded
A monumentall pyramid, but love
Is ofttimes loves undoing.

Tri. This is fuch

A cunning labyrinth of forrow, that No clew can lead them out of.

Dor. It would be

A great affront to mifery, should there live
A person halfe so wretched to out-dare
The strength of my affliction, me thinkes
Ime like some aged mountaine that has stood
In the seas watry bosome, thousand shocks
Of threatning tempess, yet by th' flattering waves,
That cling and curle about his stony limbes,
Is undermind and ruind, I have scap'd
Warres killing dangers, and by peacefull love,
Suffer a strange subversion, Oh Chrisea,
While I have reason left that can distinguish
Things with a coole and undistracted sence,
Let's argue mildly the unhappy cause
Of our undoings.

Eur. Truely fifter, 'Twas a fufpicious rashnesse, I could wish You never had attempted.

Chri. My Lord,

Humane condition alwaies censures things By their event, my aimes have had successe So strangely haplesse, that will blast the truth Of their intentions purity, I never Harbor'd the least suspicion of your faith, Which I did strive to perfect, by the test, As richest gold resind, and purg'd from drosse Of other baser metals, and besides The triall of your constancy, I meant To sound Vitellies depth; upon whose love My sister doted, so that I was loath To see her cast the treasure of her heart Upon a stranger, of whose constancy She had too small assurance.

Tri. Gentle Cosen,

Your good intents encounter'd bad successe,
But I admire, since you must needs have notice
Of his disaster, that the law would passe
Upon his life, you did not to prevent
All other virgin intercessors haste
To pay the early tribute of your love.

Chri. My wretched fate
With a too quicke prevention has orethrowne
The justnesse of my purpose, I relyed
So much upon his noblenesse, I thought
The ugly horror of a thousand deaths
Could not have mov'd his temper, and besides,
Knowing his mighty courage, I permitted
The law proceed upon him, that hereafter
He might be sure no ment can appease
Offended justice, otherwise I could Easily have stop'd this mischiefe.

Enter Bonivet.

Tri. How Chrisea? I understand you not.

Chri. Lady, to quit all scruple that I doe not wish

Yours and your Lords fucceeding happinesse, Ile offer

Something as an oblation that shall adde Peace to your nuptiall garland (see my Lord) 'My Cosen Bonivet lives.

Tri. Lives? Laclantio did not you informe us
That he was dead, and you had caus'd his body
To be prepar'd for funerall? which occasioned
The Generalls suddaine tryall, because our custome
Does not permit the corpes to be entomb'd,
Before the murderer have his sentence, fir you shall know

What tis to mocke the state thus.

Last. Good my Lord

Heare but my just excuse, I am so much The faire Chriseas beauty's by such ties Oblig'd to serve her, that I choose to hazzard The anger of the state ere her displeasure, And doe submit me to your gracious censure.

Chri. I must confirm't,
Sir it was I who caus'd him to conceale
My Cosen Bonivet, for the causes which
I did declare before, and now my selfe
Having receiv'd a satisfying proofe
Of his affection, came resolv'd to cleare
These misty errors, but my cruell sate
Has like a suddaine storme which has beate downe
A goodly field of standing Corne even ripe
For the laborious sickle, crush'd my hopes
In one sad minute into nothing.

Sab. My Lord I owe
Such an obedient duty to your peace,
That though my heart does wish to waite on yours
For ever; since I see betwixt this Lady
And you such firme apparences of love,
If the law please to allow it, I resigne
My interest to her and be fortunate
To see you two live happy.

Vit. Since the marriage
Has not arriv'd to confummating act,
I doe believe this may be done.

Tr.. Doe not delude

Your favour with vaine hopes, the law cannot

Dispense with the strict Cannon, tis impossible You should be separated.

Dor. This happinesse
Was too extreamely good to be confirm'd
To such a wretch as I am: I am like
One that did dreame of a huge masse of wealth,
And catching at it, grasp'd the fleeting ayre,
And waking grieves at the delusion.
Sab. Sir

Resume your antient quiet, the formall lawe Shall not oppose your peace, He disanull The marriage easily, and most noble Lord Pardon your humble servant.

Dor. Sure this is Some apparition to confirme my faith, Speake, art thou my Sabelli.

Vit. Yes us he,

Fate would not fuffer two fuch noble foules
To be fo difunited, gentle boy,
Thy duty to thy Master will continue,
Thy name in story, as the great example
Of loyalty in fervants.

Sab. Twas the zeale
I ought in duty to my Masters life,
Hath put me on the attempt, which if he pardon,
I'me fully satisfied.

Dor. My joyes
Does with a suddam extasse oppresse
My frame mortality, and I should sinke,
Wert not for my supporters, my Sabells,
Thou hast restor'd two lovers to their blisse,
Whose gratitude shall pay to thy desert
The tribute of their hearts. Deare Madam, now
I hope your scrupulous doubts will remaine free
From any new suspicion.

Chr. Since I have scap'd the danger past, beleeve ile avoyd

The like hereafter; my Lord please you confirme My choyse; and let my sister be dispos'd To good Vitelli, he deserves her.

Tri. Your wishes are fulfild, Cosen Bonives welcome to life

Agen; you and the Generall must be friends.

Dor. Your goodnesse will pardon my misfortune?

Bon. And desire to be esteem'd your servant.

Enter Frangipan.

Fran. With your leave gentlemen: Madam I have fuch newes to tell you, as will tickle your understanding, to believe the Generall is married; and more, Sigmor Doria, Lord Bonivet lives; That's lucky newes for you.

Dor. He's here, good Signior Frangipan.

Fran. My newes has ever the worst lucke; I must resolve to leave it off.

Ador. But fir, I have fome fuddaine newes to tell you:

The thousand Ducats you contracted to pay me,
When you could understand the French as perfectly
As my felfe; by all these Lords indifferent judgement is Due on this very minute.

Fran. This is newes indeed; you do not mean to make a gul of me, a figo for a thousand Ducats: as I am a gentleman I know not French for any thing, not for an Asse: good your grace let mee not be abused.

Cor. 'Twas I my Lord who made the bargaine with him.

The mony is not due untill my Cozen Have French as perfect as himselfe.

Dor. He has, ile beare him witnesse; for Adorni Speakes not one true French word.

Fran. How not one true French Word?

Ador. No not a word, you must disburse.

Fran. Tutor, ile tell you newes,

You made a foole of mee, I could abuse him horribly, If I durft for feare of beating.

Ador. My Lord

If he will undertake warres,

Ile quit my bargayne.

Fran. Ile pay it trible first, the name of warre

Has brought an age on me.

1ri. You two agree that: Cozens I rejoyce To fee this happy period of your loves. Let's backe unto the Temple, that the Priest May by his facred power unite your hearts. Lead to the Temple.

Exeunt

The Epilogue.

Frangipan.

Entlemen, Ile tell you Newes, the Play is done,
And he that writ it betwixt hope and Feare
Stands pensive in the Tyring-house to heare
Your Censures of his Play: Good Gentlemen
Let it be kind, or otherwise his Pen
Will write but dully, for he needs must lacke
If you disprayse't the quickning Spirit of Sacke
To instame his Genius, which you'le ever find
Devoted to you, if your Votes be kind.

FINIS.

TO THE

FIGHT HONOURABLE, JEROME, Earle of PORTLAND.

My Lord,

my Muse being yet too young to be authorized by Custome, to intrude upon a Patron, (this being the earliest flight of her ambition:) and my Reason too old to suffer mee to be guilty of Complement to one so furnished with all Reality and Worth as is your Lordship. My motive, Sir, to this audacious errour is only the pretence of my respective dutie; and for that cause, will (I hope) merit an indulgent pardon. What you shall here find set down, were the Maiden-Studies of a Muse, which aspires to no other Fame than your allowance: nor can my selfe atchieve a greater quiet to my soule, nor ayme a higher glorie, than to see my selfe by your free acceptance of this triviall Sacrifice rank'd amongst

The humblest honourers of your Name and Family:

And zeal transform our very fouls to praier;
"Twere a just tribute due to You, who are
The best of Princes; each of You a Starre
That gilds our British Orb with rayes more bright
Than was in Paradise the worlds first light.
Hark! whence this suddain harmony! the Spheares
Strive to divulge their duties; there appeares
A generall joy in Heav'n; this night has hurld,
In stead of darknesse, gladnesse ore the world;
Has calm'd the sea, on which the Tritons play,
And Syrens sing, for joy; not to betray.
But why this triumph? "Twas because this night,
Sweet Prince, Your Birth did beautise the light;

Adjudge a fecond Columne to sustaine
The glorious building of your Fathers raigne,
To be our second Hope, the cause that we
Doe pay our vowes to this Solemnitie,
In wishes, which a Mother might besit,
Or a full Lover in his zeal of wit.
May all Your lives be one continued Youth,
Attended on by health, mirth, beautie, truth.
May You live free from dangers, nay from fears,
And grow in graces as You do in years:
Shoot up like infant-Cedars, straight and even,
Till Your brave Heads affire to neighbour Heaven;
While wee, with a most humble stame inspir'd,
Live to behold Your worth, and to admire't.

Entertainment to the Prince Elector at Mr. Osbalfton's.

Rotect me my best Stars! A suddain fear Seifes my faculties; there's fomething here Surely includes divinely now I fee A power inferiour scarce to Majestie: Claimes my Prerogative; which, fince to You, To Whom the place is confecrate by vow, I do relign with freedome; bleft Delight For this shall change her Tempe, and invite The jocund Graces hither, to erect Their Pallace here, Mirth being th' Architect: Favonian winds shall with as mild a breath As is expir'd by spotlesse babes in death, Here one continued fummer still display. Making this feem a new Arabia. But whence assume I this Prophetick rage ? Rapt with whose sacred furie, I presage This happy Omen? Tis your smiles inspire (Gracious and Noble) with Ætheriall fire My frosty soule (so as Promethian heat Gave the cold clay warmth, masculine and great). Thus for my felfe. Accepts a graine of Incense, that is given With a true zeale, better than pounds of Gumms, Or Alters smoking with fat Hecatombs From fain'd Devotion: He does hope Your eyes Will dart a beame to fire his Sacrifice; Whose quickning lustre, like the Sun may bring Upon the place and him, a constant Spring.

To Lucinda, upon the first fight of her Beautie.

Nocuntring her, I thought the morning Star Had left the Nabatheans, till on her My wondring eyes with a more perfect fight Gazing, beheld, that Venus was but bright. Shee glorious. To venture to compare Her cheeks to Lillies. Sun-beams to her hair. Were to allow her mortall: far from me Be so much sin 'gainst beauties Dettie. Tell the wild Indian that with proftrate breft Adores the Sun-rife in the gorgeous East, His labour's loft; tis needlesse any more To fish for Pearle or Diamond on their shore: Nor Pearls, nor Diamonds, Rubies, or the rest Of Metaphors, by which are oft exprest Our common beauties, nere can hope to be Grac'd, by being uf'd as an Hyperbolie In her delineation. 'Twas the light Of her bright eyes depriv'd mine of the fight They once enjoy'd: those fools who sought to make A Star of Berenices haire, might take Hers for a Planet, fix it, and ne're fear To dazzle Phoebus lustre in the sphear.

Lucinda describ'd.

Here's not an eye that views Lucinda's face,
But wondring at the perfect grace
That does within that modell reft,
Esteems her most transcendently above
The power of Fancie, Art, or Love,
Truly to be exprest.

To fay each golden treffe that does adorne
Her glorious Forehead might bee worne
By Iuno or by beauties Queene,
Were to prophane her facred threds; for they Could not fuch precious Locks display
On the Idahan Greene.

They are then gorgeous ornaments, and bee
The upper branches of that tree
Which eafily does men intice,
Beleeving it the tree of life, to fay
That they have found a ready way
To th' long lost Paradice.

Her Iv'rie Forehead curious Nature hath Created for the milkie path; By which the covetous gazers feek To find a passage by her tempting eyes Without their foules intire surprize To th' Apples in her cheek. Those funs of brightnesse which so farre out-shine Humanitie, that their divine
Lustre perswades us, 'tis no sin
To think each as a Seraphin does stand
To guard that blest forbidden Land,
And the faire fruit within.

Of which her fips like fwelling Grapes appeare,
The fweetest children of the yeare,
In Natures crimson liv'rie drest,
And by her balmie breath, to ripenesse brought
They smile, then blush, as if they sought
Strait softly to be prest.

Then (as two full Pomegranates) lower growes
Her breafts; fuch wouders fure as those
Will force nice mis-beliefe to know
That miracles as yet unceas?'d remaine,
Since there doth flourish in each veine
Violets on stalks of Snow.

But these (though true descriptions) are so farr Beneath her worth, I have a Warr Within my pensive soule, to see So many wondrous rare Persections dwell In one, yet find no Parallell In spacious Poetrie.

To Lucinda departing.

H! stay Lucinda, and let slie
A thousand loves from thy bright eye,
By which inspir'd I will expresse
Thy beauties, my faire Shepheardesse.

Thy Cheek, loves Tempe, where does grow Warme Roses in fost beds of Snow. This wonder (Dearest) is to tell The world, th' art Beauties miracle.

The envious Panther, at thy breath, Excelling his, does figh to death; And at the lustre of thine eye Stars wink, are buried in the Skie.

The amorous Thorne (that does intwine In pricklie armes the Eglantine,) When thou thy brightnesse dost display, Blossomes, and makes even Winter May.

The wanton Syrens that beguile With flatt'ring accents, at thy fmile Chaunt layes as harmlesse as the Dove, Or Red-brest when she courts her Love.

But all these glories could not fire My frostie soule with big desire; The Cause that made Lucinda mine Could not be humane, shee's divine.

To Lucinda weeping.

Eep not Lucindæ, 'lesse you meane To purge the world from filth, as cleane As are your thoughts: too rich a prize For earth, is such a sacrifice.

Such tears as yours, suppose young May Does to the flowers each morning pay. Such tears must sure all eyes intice To think your Eyes Loves Paradice.

Oh! they have emptied Natures Store, Made Snow, and emulous Chrystall poore: Your tears may justly claim pretence To be the balme of Innocence.

But least such Gemmes should be confin'd To earth; behold the amorous wind Catching them, fixes every one In heaven, a Constellation.

But fince (my dearest) thou wilt weep, Thy tears for holyer uses keep; When plagues upon the earth are hurld, Let fall one drop, 'twill save the world.

To Lucinda. A New-years Gift.

Raw that black vail. (my fair one) do not shrowd Those eves in filken mists, or in a cloud Of waving Curle: be mercifull, appear Like thy bright felf, and bring the infant Year Into the world: old Time her Mother's run Into fo dull a Lethargie: the Sun Is frozen in his couch, and cannot rife Til thaw'd by th' temp'rate vertue of thine eies, Those fost and gentle Stars, whose pure and clear Rayes, from the Chaos would have forc'd the year. Up then, Illustrious Beautie, gild the day; Change Tanuarie into vonthfull May. See the cold earth does Winters liv'rie shift. Off'ring the fresh Spring as your New-years Gist; While the pale Couflip does the Primrose call To wait on You at this new Festivall. Created by your beams: the Winds invite The numble winged messengers of light, The early Lark, and chirping Thrush to tune Their notes as chearfully, as when in June They foftly whisper to the azure skie Of a clear day, a beauteous Augurie. How trivial is a Poets force! I can Teach birds t'admire you, the rich Ocean Tender its mines of Pearl, the Earth falute Thee with its choifest metals, flowrs and fruit. Impose a tribute on the Sun, force Stars T' adore you more than erring Mariners Do them in Tempells But when I impart

An off'ring on the Alter of my heart To thy commanding Deity, I can pay Nought but a wreath of Mirtle or of Bay, A Poets humble facrifice: unlesse My wishes (which realitie expresse. Though unperform'd) may guiltlefly afoire To die the Martyrs of your facred fire. May all the happinesse Heav'n can conferre Be acted on your lives faire Theater: May you be chast as beautifull; mischance Never disturbe your peace, not in a trance: May you live long, and healthfull: may no page Of your lives volume, have a line for Age To write his gastly name in; but when Time Grows old and fickly on you, and does clime With eager feet, your hill of youth, may all His steps be slip'rie, may he backward fall Beyond his fates recoverie, till hee bring Your fading minutes back into the fpring Of strength and beauty, 'till your cheek does wear The same bright lustre that adorns this year.

Which I doe wish the power of gentle Fate May to my Love and yours make fortunate.

To Sleep, upon Lucinda layd to reft.

T Ence ugly Image of grim death; how dare Thy fawcie boldnesse venture on this faire Epitome of heaven? Dost think that shee Participates of fraile mortalitie In such a drowse passion (Foole) go stretch Thy remisse wings ore some poore aguish wretch, Some with'red Hag, whom for her youths loofe fin, Tust heaven has destin'd to be kept within The prison of her bed, from her be gone: The light can fuffer no privation. Wert thou not stupid, deafe? didst thou not heare When shee enrich'd her pillow, how each Spheare Striv'd to expresse its dutie, which should bee Prime Quirifter, in whiftling harmonie To th' Citizens in Heaven, who at that call Invited Saints to chant a Madrigall Devoted to her filent reft? The Avre Grew clear and pleasing, every cloud so fayre; Heav'ns forehead wore no wrinkles, violent floods Kis'd the smooth pebles, and the woods With their Inhabitants conjoyn'd in this. T'afford her senses a sweet Exstasis Didst thou not see how every glorious Star With their pale Mistris Moon, to wait on her, Officiously contracted their dim light To Tapers, that at opening of her fight They might new gild their Rayes. The Indian which Had nere been poor, had he not first been rich, Dives for unvalued Pearle, and fears to rife Till he can borrow lustre from her Eyes To polish his dull Merchandize. Oh shee! The Abstract of all which wild Poetrie In its loofe raptures taught, wherein her rest Invites the Winds (as when the Phœnix nest Is by their aavour fir'd) to mix their breaths With hers, so precious, that (abortive Death's First child) dull Sleep, like to the Nightman, must By stealth injoy it: see the parched Dust Turns to Affyrian odors, and does skip Like an enamor'd Fairie to her Lip. Where Venus Roses grow. Rest safe, my Sweet, Till Sylvans wake, and till the Muses greet Thee with their choisest harmonie; till night Acknowledge all that it injoyes of light, To thee the Queen of Splendor, whose bright Rayes Renewes in mee the more than Halcion dayes Love in its Primitive purenesse wore. Then rise, And let mine draw new Influence from thine Eyes.

To Lucinda: inviting her from her Chamber.

Hat means this absence (fair One)? What sad doom Impose you on your felf, that one poor Room Includes your glorious Beautie! Is the Ayr Lesse wholsome here, the Skie lesse clear, lesse fair ? Or to inrich that, have you tane a pride Meaning t' impov'rish all the Rooms beside? The little Birds that by the Window flie Wanting your presence, straight fall down and die: And I, who eal'ly could have fixt your Name A Planet in the Firmament of Fame: Who could have dreft your head with Lightning, and Hung at each Hair a Starne Diamond; Who could have fent the cunning Boy to feek His last lost Arrow in your polish'd Cheek; Who could have raif'd a Mount upon your Lip, On which (like Fairies) all the Loves should trip. And added to your Breath fuch a perfume. As ever fpending, never should consume: Who could have fetcht the Indies (both) to deck This well-form'd Iv'rie Pallace of your Neck; And like a cunning Painter, have exprest The Worlds perfections in your Globe-like Breft: Praising each Feature fo, till every part Appear your Face, and Conquer'd every heart, I for a wreath of Willow cast away My flowry Chaplet of the greener Bay:

Dipping my Pen in tears, what ere it be That I would write, it proves an Elegie. You must expell this Sadnesse: You, whose light Eclipses that pale Virgin of the Night, The folitary Moon, whose every Ray Transcends the clearest lustre of the Day: You in whose eyes sit flames, which can beget Themselves a living Spheer in every Wit: You that are All Women can be, and more Than Youth and Beauty ere disclos'd before: Who doe resemble Heav'n so neer, You'd want Onely the Name (not Nature) of a Saint. You with a smile, can like the West-wind bring An unexpected Summer on the Spring; And with one Beame, or comfortable Glance Rauish my soule into so high a trance. That Your bright Head shall hit the Stars, and flie To Heaven o'th' fwift wings of my Poesie: While I, with equal feare and hope possest. Tender my Heart your Sacrifice, and rest

Your Servant.

To Lucinda. He being in Prison.

Receive these lines from your imprison'd Friend, As the last Farewell which his hand must fend

To greet your Eyes from which mine borrow'd hight

To guide my wandring Fancie to the fight Of Mortals wonder, in your Essence: Love First darted Raies from those bright Stars to move Me to admire your Beautie: But agen To make old Nature proud, as when my Pen Flowd with mellifluous Epithites, to show The glorious shape shee fully did bestow On your unequal'd Frame. To fay your haire Are nets of Gold, whose Tramels might insnare The King of gods: or that your Iv'rie brefts Are Balls of Camphire, sweeter than the nests Where the Arabian Phenix does defire To burne her felfe; (as I have done, in fire More precious than her Funerall flames) would add New griefs, fo powerfull as would force mee mad (Were I of stronger temper). Since I've lost Those rarities bought with the pricelesse Cost Of my unvalued Libertie: which now I must forgoe for ever; from the Vow You made before the Hierarchie of Heaven (Which now I fummon witnesses how even My Love has been) I free you; If you heare That wilfully I perish'd, one poor teare

(I aske no more) shed, and my Soule, when Death Has robd my carcasse of its loathed breath, Shall pray, that you hereaster may possess A Friend that lov'd your Memorie no lesse Than I, who spight of Fortune will be blest That once I was term'd Yours; though now I rest Forsaken.

To Lucinda, revolted from him.

Was I who made thee Beauteous before: You might have fate regardlesse at your dore, Or past the Streets (as other Women doe) Without falutes, or being congee'd to: When now each eye that fees thee, does admire To view a mortall Creature to aspire So neer the Heav'nly Essence; every tongue (Since I fet out thy Excellence among Men of ingenuous Spirits) strives to raise Thy Name beyond the name of Praise. Nature did well (I must confesse) to frame Thee of her choisest Matter: for the same You stand indebted to her, and 'tis fit You should acknowledge thankfulnesse for it. The Orient Pearl new taken from the shell Though't be as precious in it felf, to fell. Cannot fo fitting and commodious bee As when 'tis polished by a Lapidarie. The glistring Diamond shines not to the fight Till by the Mill and Cutter 'tis made bright; You had as much implicate Beautie (true) As now you have, when first I did you view: But like a Diamond clouded ore with Drofle, It gave fmall luftre, caufe unknown it was: I polish'd it by giving it a Name; Beautie's regardlesse, till adorn'd by Fame. But Oh the Faith of Women! Can there be Evalions found for fuch Apostacie

As is in you! what Penance can abridge Such an Impietie, fuch dire Sacriledge 'Gainst Love's imperial Godhead, to resist, Contemn his Orgies, which by me his Priest He did enjoyn, by his own powerfull Name You should observe with a religious Flame? And you had yow'd to do it, fwore that I Should offer up to his great Deitie Your heart; which Love himself would not despise (But beg for fuch a welcome Sacrifice, More precious than the fweet Panchayan Gumms, The Phœnix Pile, or fuming Hecatombs). But as a vapour which the flatt'ring Sun Attracts to th' pure Ayrs middle Region. Under pretence to give a new Starre birth. And throwes a fading Meteor to the Earth; So fell your Heart from Love's unspotted Throne By your intemp'rate violation Of Vows to me; in which if you perfift, Mercie will blot you from her candid Lift, As a prodigious Monster, and firme Truth Blush at a periurie so black in Youth. So white as yours: at which the Rose-cheek'd Morne Might once have borrow'd lustre, and unshorne Apollo brightnesse: Oh! why should there rest Such falshood, such unkindnesse in a Brest Whose superficiall figure does outgoe In whitnesse Lillies, or untrodden Snow? Ingratefull Woman! what unborne offence Can give a specious Shadow, a Pretence To thy unhallow'd falshood what strange Cause Thy fuddain change, this alteration drawes! Perhaps now I have fet thy Beautie forth, With all the Attributes expressing Worth, That when I did but speak of thee, or write Fancie and Love daune'd in each Epithite. Some other Suitor, who to please your eares, Purchases Raptures, which his dull brain bears As Parrots what is taught them, who can speak

But by tradition has furprized your weak Imagination; and does proudly boast In gaining that which me most labour cost. Or elfe perhaps your over-curious eye Has fpy'd fome new unknown deformitie In me; or't may be possible you think (Which is most likely) that the Muses drink Is quite exhausted: that my wearie Quill' Wants moulture to explain your Praises still. In that full way, that over-liberall strain My Genius us'd at first your Love to gain. If this be it, I'll fill the Daphnean Quire With a fresh Chaunter, snatch bright Phabus Lyre From his fwift Fingers, and once more rehearle Thy worth in fuch a strange mellistuous Verse, That fweet Propertius shall his Cynthia tell Thy Praises do her Lustre far excell: Gabius shall weep that his Lycoris name Is now furpass'd by thy immortall Fame: And (my great Master) Ovid shall confesse Corynna's shining Beautie to be lesse Than thine: fince he, for his Corynna's fake Did only three Books of Loves choice Art make; But I for thine will fuch Concerts devise. That after no Invention shall arise. Yeeld then, and let us rvot in the Sweets That in Youth, Love, and glorious Beauty meets; That all the gods may envie to behold Us over-doe their Fables: Danae's Gold Be counted Droffe, and Lada's Swan appear Black as a Crow, when whiter Thou art there. First shall my Lips with an unvalued Kisse Suck from (those fragrant Mountainets of blisse) Thy melting Lips, more sweetnesse than the Bees Extract from Rofes, or Hyblaan Trees, When to the Ayr their tender wings they yeeld, And with their mouths depopulate the field. And then descending to thy Iv'rie Neck My wandring Fancie shall my dull Lips check,

That they ore-flipt thy Cheek; thence they shall flye With hot propension to thy flaming Eye; Thence to that smooth, that polish'd plain of Snow, On which thy Brests (those Hils of wonder) grow, Where little Cupids daunce, and do contend Which of them first shall venture to descend To the Elifian Vallies, that doe lie 'Twixt them and their rich Mine of puritie. Thy flender Waste. What does remain below. 'Tis fit that none but you and I should know, When like a vent'rous well resolved man I fail through your unfathom'd Ocean To Loves fafe Harbour; I'm too modest (Sweet) With wide expressions of our Loves to greet Thy willing eares, fince I for my part meane In Action, not in Words to be obscene.

Nclose those Eye-lids, and out-shine
The brightnesse of the breaking day;
The light they cover is divine,
Why should it fade so soone away?
Stars vanish so, and day appeares,
The Sun's so drown'd i'th' morning's teares.

Oh! let not fadnesse cloud this Beautie, Which if you lose you'll nere recover; It is not Love's, but Sorrowes dutie To die so soon tor a dead Lover. Banish, oh! banish griese, and then Our Joyes will bring our Hopes agen.

Epithalamium.

The Joyes of Youth, and what the Spring Of Health, Strength, Happiness can bring, Wait upon this Noble paire. Lady, may you still be faire As earliest Light, and stil enjoy Beauty which Age cannot destroy.

May you bee fruitfull as the Day; Never Sigh but when you Pray; Know no Grief, but what may bee To temper your Felicitie.

And You my Lord, may trueft Fame
Still attend on your great Name.
Live both of you efpouf'd to Peace,
And with your years, let Love increase.
Goe late to Heav'n, but comming thither,
Shine there, two glorious Starres together.

Epithalamium.

He holy Priest had joynd their Hands, and now Night grew propitious to their bridall Vow; Majestick Iuno, and young Hymen slyes To light their Pines at the fair Virgins eyes; The little Graces amorously did skip With the small Cupids from each Lip to Lip, Venus her self was present, and untide Her Virgin Zone, when loe on either side Stood as her Hand-maids, Chastite and Truth, With that immaculate guider of her Youth, Rose-colour'd Modestie; these did undresse The beauteous Maid, who now in readinesse, The nuptiall Tapors waving bout her Head, Made poor her Garments and enrich'd her Bed.

While the fresh Bridegroome, like the lusty Spring, Did to the holy Bride-bed with him bring Attending mass'line Vertues; down he laid His snowie Limbs by a far whiter Maid. There Kisses link'd their Minds; as they imbrace, A Quire of Angels slew about the place, Singing all Blisse unto this Pair for ever, May they in Love and Union still persever.

Love.

Ove's a Child, and ought to be Won with fimiles: his Deitie
Is cloath'd in Panthers skins which hide
Those parts which kill, if but espy'd;

Hates Wars, but fuch as mildly led By Venus are to pleasures Bed; There do soft imbraces fight, Kisses combate with delight.

Amorous looks, and fighs discover What befits a timerous Lover. But who ere to Love doth yeeld, Mars his Speer, nor Pallas shield

Can fave from ruine; for Loves Fire Once enkindled by defire, Blown by thoughts impetuous blafts, It for ever burning lafts.

The Sphear to which it strives to flie Are humane hearts that seek to die; These (like fuell) Loves fire cherish, Till they to ashes burne and perish.

To a reviv'd Vacation Play.

Prologue.

T is a dead Vacation; yet we see (Which glads our fouls) a wel-fet Company Adorn our Benches: We did scarce expect So full an Audience in this long neglect Of Court and Citte Gentry, that transfer In Terme their Visits to our Theater. The Countrey Gentlemen come but to Town For their own buf'nesse sake, to carry down A fad Sub-pana, or a fearfull Writ For their poor neighbour, not for love of Wit. Their comely Madams too come up to fee New Fashions, or to buy some Raritie For their young Son and Heir, and only flay Till by their Sheepshearing they'r call'd away. The Courtiers too are absent, who had wont To buy your Wares on trust, they'r gone to hunt The nimble Buck i'th' Countrey; and conceive, They give you Int'rest, if you but receive A haunch of Ven'son, or if they supplie Your Wives trim Churching with a Red-Deer Pie. Few Gentlemen are now in Town, but those Who in your Books remain uncroff'd for Clothes. Who, when you ask them money, are so slack To pay't; their answer is, What do you lack? You are our daily and most constant Guests. Whom neither Countrey bus 'nesse nor the Gests

Can ravish from the Citie; tis your care

To keep your Shops, 'leffe when to take the Ayr You walke abroad, as you have done to day, To bring your Wives and Daughters to a Play. How fond are those men then that think it fit T'arraigne the Citie of defect of Wit? When we do know, you love both wit & sport, Especially when you've vacation for't. And now we hope you've leifure in the Citie To give the World cause to suspect you witty. We would intreat you then put off awhile That formall brow you wear when you beguile Young Chapmen with bad Wares; pray do not look On us, as on the Debtors in your Book, With a shrewd countenance; what we act to day Was for your fakes; (some think) a pretty Play: Nay wee our felves almost presume it good Because we hope it will be understood By your capacious Brains, which know to get Wealth, and for that cause we can't doubt your Wit: At least we dare not, fince wee'r bound to say All those are witty come to see our Play.

PROLOGVE.

C Uppose a Merchant when he lanches forth An untry'd Vessell, doubtful of its worth, Dare not adventure on that infant Peece The glorious fetching of a golden Fleece From the remot'st Indies. 'Tis so with mee. Whose Innocence and timerous Modestie Does blush at my own shadow, prone to feare Each wave a Billow that arries here. The Company's my Merchant, nor dare they Expose my weak frame on so rough a Sea, 'Lesse you (their skilfull Pilots) please to stear By mild direction of your Eve and Ear Their new rigg'd Bark. This is their hopes and mine Promise my selfe; if you like North-stars shine, I like a daring, and adventrous Man, Seeking new paths i'th' angry Ocean, In threatning Tempests when the surges rife And give falt kisses to the neighb'ring Skies. When bluftring Boreas with impetuous breath Gives the spread Sailes a wound to let in Death. Cracks the tall Mast, forcing the Ship (though loth) On its carv'd Prow to wear a Crown of froth: Will face all perils boldly, to attain Harbour in fafety: then fet forth againe.

To Mr. Charles Cotton.

YOu that are he, you that are only he, Who are what every noble Soule should be, The Abstract of Mankind, who truely can Contract Wits spacious Orb into a span; Have stock enough of goodnesse to restore What erring Nature ever lost before. 'Tis not the greatnesse of your Name or Blood Makes mee adore you, 'tis because you'r good. The Wits Mæcenas can without a storme Of triviall words, even actuate and inform With fpritly foule that matter which would lie Lost like a lumpe, without a memorie Or life t'ingender Wit. Think there can bee In mee (dear Sir) no feeds of Flatterie. Rapt with an holy Zeal, I needs must sing Your ample Worth; and when I touch a string Of my Phabeian Lyre, chast Daphne shall Tender her Bayes to deck the Festivall: Devoted to your ment, Backhus then Shall with his richest Nectar-swelling Pen Indue me with fuch Wine, as I do think At least I wish, that you this night may drink; Pure blood of the rich Spanish Grape which may Make you immortall, and atchieve the Bay Poets by drinking ayme at May there bee In your carouses, Wit and Companie Fit for your dear enjoying; may the wealth Of noble Wine enrich you with a Health Great as my wishes; while forgotten I By your Commands, banish'd that Company I so admire, in my Archaick bed Sighe like a Girle, whose precious Maidenhead Is ravish'd from her; till your future view Banish that pensive sadnesse, and renew The happinesse of Vaca Commont

To my Friend, Advice.

N Natures Annals, Man's the perfect Story. And you of man had been the perfect glory, Had not the errour of your giddie youth Sold the Inheritance of that noble truth Entaild on glorious manhood; you who are In your defires fo much irregular, That your Ambition is to have your May, Your flower of Youth spent in the fruitlesse play Of gaining Female favours. In your blood Live flames, (which felt) yet are not understood; Continuall Ætnaes in your veines nere cease To burne, yet doe by burning even increase. What pleasure find you in a foolish Kisse, Or wanton look, that you do place your bliffe. Your minds Elisium in an amorous glance, Or Priapeian night-work, such a trance, A dreame, a nothing? Can that be the fumme Of joy that you should aime at: to become For that an Idiot; to enthrall your heart To one whom nature made your weaker part, Your houshold servant; to adore her haire, Make of her face an Idoll, which though faire. Is but a painted Sepulche within Containing rotten ashes of black fin. Reliques of foule corruption! oh! reclaime Those fordid thoughts, and let a nobler aime Be your minds Object, be the finall Cause Of your youths Actions: Let not Cupids Laws

Govern you wholly: For your female Creatures, Inchanting Divels clad in humane features. Earth's needfull evils; Women, they whose name Divided, does most perfectly proclaime Their bad Condition; they, whose Beauty must Be to men fire-brands to enkindle Lust: They are that fweet and undigested meat That does confume all those that dare to eat The too delicious Banquet; Bels that fings; One tune at Weddings and at Buryings; Serpents whose cunning carriage can intice Another Adam out of Paradice. They'r all extremely good, or fraught with evils: If good, best Saints; if bad, the worst of Divels. Pardon mee (facred Woman-hood) that I Who've raif'd your Beautie to a Deitie, Who know you good and vertuous, that you can Excell in worth as well as feature. Man: That I should for the love I bear this Youth, Injure the innocence of your matchlesse truth: 'Tis to reclaime his follies: Let him fee How bad the worst of your frail Sexe can bee. Ile expiate this crime hereafter, pay To your chast thoughts my own yet Virgin Bay; How much am I your friend then, that dare chuse To hazzard the fresh honour of my Muse For your dear fake; that with one loving breath Giving you life, betray my felfe to death? But this is friendships dutie, and I must Rather to you than to my felf be just. Oh! Noble Youth, when you with judgment shall Read all the Texts not held Canonicall In womens Legends, when you shall behold In Times fuocessive Volume, what's inrol'd Concerning them, how many leaves are spent Upon their Lives, and each a Monument Speaking the mischieses that of old did rise From the intemperate glances of their eyes: And when Times Herald Fame shall usher in

Those whom Antiquitie brands for that sin:
Bring Helen forth and the lascivious Boy
Wrapt in the slames (themselves did cause) of Trov:

When faire incestuous Myrrha you shall see Groaning within the entrails of a Tree; View wanton Lais, who so oft did fell Her beauteous youth, a hornd Fiend in Hell: Or Tyrian Dido with big rage possest, Opening the white dores of her Love-fick brest To let in wilfull death: Or when you shall Read modern Stories more Authenticall Then Poetry has taught: You shall survey Those Monsters, Nero and Caligula, Naked and trembling; then with guilty feare Infatiate Meffalina shall appear: Then the two Queens of Naples, who in Name Were parallels as well as in their fame, Whose appetites could never be withstood Till their owne bloods quench'd their own heate of blood.

When you have feen thefe, turn your eyes and look On that fair paper, that unspotted Book, Where happier Stories flourish: and behold Inscrib'd in Characters of purest Gold Those glorious Names that Fame records to bee Th' immaculate Champions of bleft Chaftitie: Selfe-murdred Lucrece, 'twill a Saint expresse. And damne foule Tarquin for's lasciviousnesse. Chast Arethusa there displayes her Beams, That shine, though drown'd in lustful Alphey's streams. Daphne, that Phabus hot purfuit did shun, Looks brighter now than the lascivious Sun. But vain are all examples: fince even we, By Reason's Mustris, wife Philosophie, In Ethicks are instructed that we must Think each thing wicked which we know unjust: And what more dire injustice can there be Than to ourselves a want of Charitie ?

But I'm too ferious now, and must excuse
The over-bold instructions of my Muse:
I know, dear friend, you'r so maturely wise,
You can see vice, though cloth'd in the disguise
Of vertue; and tis needless then to preach
Doctrine to you, who abler are to teach
Than be instructed: but my Pen does move
Only by true directions of my love,
From which if you receive the least offence,
I must appeale to th' Court of Innocence
From your harsh Censure; since what I have said
Was not to chide you, Friend, but to perswade.

TErtue's reward is Honour, and though you Wear no more Titles than descend as due From your brave Ancestors, vet to your Blood Tis an addition (Sir) to be thought Good. You, whose demeanor bears that equall port, You've won the love, not envie of the Court: That can observe the forme and Laws of State. Gaining mens emulation, not their hate; That with a nobler temper can decide The diff 'rence 'twixt formalitie and pride, That your indifferent actions are as far From b'ing too common, as too fingular. So that with glorious freedome you direct Your Will to what it ought most to affect. You in whose Nature (as two Suns) arise The Attributes of Bountefull and Wife. You that are Valiant, (as Fames eldest Child Honour) yet teach even Valour to be mild. You that (in brief) with certain judgment can Be perfect Courtier, yet be perfect Man. Tis no Poetick flatt'ry that does raife My eager Muse up to this height of Praise. Big with an holy and Prophetick rage, In Fame's great Book, I in an ample Page Wil fix the Annals of your Worth, which shall When other Names are held Apocryphall. In that eternall Volume be annext A faire Appendix to that glorious Text. But now (Great Sir) 'tis time that I excuse The too audacious errours of my Muse,

And by my humble wishes strive to win A full remission for its daring sin.

May you enjoy what ever Strength and Health Can yeeld of pleasure; or unbounded Wealth Can without riot purchase: may you bee As free from others envie, as y' are free From its desert: and may (which long since You had) grow great i'th' favour of your Prince. May not mischance invade your souls blest peace; But may it even as it consumes, increase. And when decrepid age shall slowly creep Over your Youth, and to eternall Sleep Consine your eye-lids; may you then expire Blest as a Martyr that does Court the Fire.

Poets are Prophets Sir, and things indeed Happen, when they but wish they may succeed.

ELEGIE.

Ow dul's my Faith! 'twould pufle my belief That there could be room left on earth for grief,

Did not the Worlds great Genius feem to powre
Its very eyes out in a plenteous showre,
As if it meant its moysture should create
Another Deluge, spight of pow'rfull Fate.
The Stars are mournfull grown, and do conspire
With unaccustom'd tears to quench their fire.
The Sun himselfe looks heavie, and puts on
(In spight of Light) a sad privation,
Since Noble PORTLAND'S fall, whose glorious breath

Was too too precious to bee stolne by Death.
Grim Tyrant hold thy hand, if thou'lt imploy
Thy unresisted Shafts, let them destroy
Only those petty subjects, whom their Fate
Never produc'd for Pillars of the State;
The Kingdome well may spare them, and their losse

Would rather be a bleffing than a croffe. There's multitudes that only feek to bee The ends, not raifers of their Familie, To whom thy Darts (their Patrimony spent) Would be most welcome Cures of Discontent. Ambitious Furie! 'Tis thy only aime To vanguish those same true born sons of Fame That rife by noble merit; fuch was hee To whom my Muse does pay this Elegie. He who though plac'd in Honors highest seat Striv'd rather to be counted Good than Great. Into whose Essence (all conceiv'd) that State Did its own foule even transubstantiate: Such were his Counfels, so supremely wife, They alwaies conquerd where they did advise. His Judgement too fo strong, and so mature, What ere it promif'd, feem'd to be fecure: Yet 'twas with fuch a moderation mixt. That as on Law, fo 'twas on Confcience fixt. All's actions were so even, they nere did force The great mans Envie. nor the poor mans Curfe. Such was his Life, so temperate and just, It nere knew Malice, nor commerc'd with Luft. What fuddain trance furrounds me? what extreme

Passion confines my senses to a Dreame solution I feele a lazie humour slowly creep Over my Fancie, charming it to sleep, Or rather, that (entranc'd) it might supply Great PORTLAND'S Herse with a fit Elegie. Now a Poetick fune brings mee on To mount to Fames eternall Mansson, Where upon Marble Seats I did behold Those glorious Worthies so renound of old For prudent Counsels, who were held the health, The very life and soule o' th' Common-wealth. There the mellishuous Cicero did shine Bright with the spoiles of vanquish'd Cataline; And as his Motto, ore his Throne there hung,

Arms yeeld to Arts; let fwords give place to the Tongue.

There Roman Fabius fate, who wrought the fall (By his delays) of Punick Hannibal. 'Mongst other forraigne Statesmen, there appears Those of our Nation, who for many years Did in ambiguous Fortunes frown and fmile Uphold the Fate and Glory of this Isle. There that great Marshall Pembroke did sustaine The reeling Pillars of third Henries Raigne, And [did] of this our English heaven advance Himselse the Atlas 'gainst invading France. (After a numerous Companie) in his Pall. And other holy Robes, Fame did install Illustrious Morton, that compos'd the Jarre Betwixt the House of York and Lancaster. There Sackvile, Ceall, Egerton, were plac'd, On whom as I stood gazing, Fame in hast Approaching, did command them to prepare For PORTLAND'S welcome to that Theater Of ever-living Honour: and to mee. Goe fing (quoth shee) this Worthies Elegie. Straight (as the Muses Priest) I did obey And 'gan to touch my Instrument, when they Leaving their Thrones, with an unanimous voice Welcom'd the Sage Lord, and did give him choice Which Seat he would accept; but modest hee. Repaid their Courtefie with Courtefie, Till Fame herfelf installd him, and did give His merit this Inferrition, which shall live As his great Name, unraz'd: Here PORTLAND lues,

That was as truly Iust as hee was wife; Cautious, yet full of Councell; Mild, yet free From feeking idle Popularitie; To Good men gentle, to the Bad fevere; Lov'd Vertue for its felfe, and not for Feare.

This Fame inscrib'd and this shall deck his Herse, While there is Time, or memorie of Verse.

Eares are all Great mens Obsequies, when they Break from the glorious prison of their Clay: A thousand fluent eyes their losses mourns, As if they meant to drowne them in their Urnes. If then this forrow customarie bee, How many eyes should bee wept out for thee ? Admired Avton / every mournfull breath Lamenting thine should sigh itself to death, As proud to wait on thy pure Soul, which fled To heaven so swiftly; none did think thee dead, Till the loud Bell (Deaths Trumpet) did proclaime Thy flight to immortalitie; then Fame Herfelfe put on Griefs Liverie, and fung Thy weighty loffe, till fhee had loft her tongue In that fad use, as if shee meant to have A Tombe for all her Storie in thy Grave. Thou, who when living, Truths example stood, To teach Great men to be Great and Good: Nay, to be Wife and Learnd, to act each part Of their Lives Scene, with Vertue and with Art, Which thou mad'st Vertues Hand-maid, and with skil Manag'd thy Greatnesse, without Greatnesse ill. But Sorrow does distract me, and my Zeal Of Gnef for thee does (with the practice) steal

Away my Muses Faculties, and now Deaths Embleme (Cypreffe) hangs upon my Brow Heavie as thy cold Marble; else ere this. My pregnant Muse, big with an Extasis Of Wonder, had endeavour'd to fet forth The unexpressive glorie of thy Worth: It had displaid thy Learning, which was such, That it (in justice) may compare with much Admired Barday, or be faid to fide With Wit-excelling Buchanan, (the pride And glorie of thy Nation) Twas to known To both the Kingdomes, each would gladly own Thee as their Off spring, but ours (grieving) must Only be happy to preferve thy dust. Which as if Fame had meant it should inherit The glone due unto thy living Merit, This unaccustom'd Honour to it brings, To mix with facred ashes of our Kings.

Good, is in Subjects Kingly, and in thee All Graces strive to make an Unitie Of pious goodnesse; many slames so meet, And curle into one Pyramid, then greet Their subtle Spheare; in Aylons equall Brest Dwels all that could for Vertue be exprest. So that the brightnesse of his Lives just glory

Shall shame the Bad, be to the good a Story.

Dmired Burroughs! though to deck thy Herse
Thy Merits challenge a Tenth Muses Verse;
Though, if thy Valour just reward should have,
Mars should turne Poet, write thy Epitaph:
Yet let not thy blest soule (Heroick Spirit)
That now in heavens great Armie does inherit
The Civick Garland, Laurell, and enjoyes
More glorious triumphs than the Romish toyes
Uf d to grace happie Conquests with, despise
This, though no Hecatombe, yet a Sacrisice,
Which the well-wishes of a bleeding heart
Offers as Fun'rall slames to thy desert.

To fay thou wert Wise, Valiant, and the rest Of those good Attributes thy Worth exprest T' include in it, were nothing; 'twere more six That some sweet Genius, some Ovidian Wit Should studie for new Epithites t' expresse Thee as thou wert then living, that's no lesse Than Master of those Gifts, which here related Would make old Nature proud she had created A work of so much wonder, that pale Death Has lodg'd thee now (Illustrious Soule) beneath A pile of Marble, whose hard entrals weep O're thy cold ashes, and since yron-sleep Has closed thy eye-lids, let thy silent Grave Retain with thee this for thy Epitaph:

Vpon the death of Mrs. Sufanna Ofbalston.

ELEGIE.

Pree thee leave me, Grief; if thou wilt slay Within my panting Brest, shew mee the way To present death; or force my eyes to shed So large a flood of Tears, as may bee spred Like a transparent Christall Sheet upon Her Grave, that so no other worthless Stone Afpire t' adorne her Monument, Oh Shee! Who was what ev'ry loyall Wife should bee: Shee in whose living Character was writ A modest Sweetnesse cloath'd in harmlesse Wit: Not like those ayrie Dames that only strive To keep their Faces, not their Fames alive: That prey upon their Husbands wealth, confume Whole Signories in Painting and Perfume: That only make an Idoll of their Will. And hate all Good, 'cause they account it Ill. No, shee was pleasing, void of least Offence: Was fully Wife, yet full of Innocence. But oh! how I undoe my felfe! I now Must pull my Lawrell from my wrinkled Brow, And wreath'd in deathfull Cypresse, sadly call My Muse to wait upon her Funerall. Light thy fick Tapers, penfive Muse, and come

To wait her Death, and thine owne Martyrdome; For never be invok'd to write (by mee), When hers is writ, another Elegie.

Now in that filent Tenement of Death, The Church, go fing in a foft Swan-like breath, A Requem to thy memory; and there Drowne ev'ry word thou utter'ft with a Teare: But let them be fuch Tears as may expresse Not Sorrow, but a joyful Extasis.

And You (dear Sir) in whom there doth furvive So much of her, shee needs must rest alive In your yet bleeding memory: You that know How much each tributarie Grace did owe To her unmatch'd Perfections, how that shee Was Vertues, Beauties just Epitome: How that her Eves were Sphears in which did move The equall orbs of Chastitie and Love: Her Cheeks two fields of purity, where grew The Rose and Lilie, mixt i' th' mutuall hue Of Smiles and Blushes; how each outward part Did fpeak the richer luftre of her Heart, Her Minds intensive glory. When you think Iustly on this, her Grave no more shall drink Your frequent Tears, but fraught with noble Mirth, You'll foon devest your Soul of all that's Earth About it: fay, 'twas justice to transferre From this dull Region fuch a matchless Starre. And fix't i'th' Christall Heav'n, you'll then confeffe

Your constant Love to her appear'd far lesse In Griefe than Joy; for forrow spent for this Her happinesse, is envie to her blisse, Not charitie t' her memory; yet my Verse Shall hang a lasting Hatchment on her Herse, My Lawrell deck her Urne, in which does he As much as of Mortalitie could die.

You Sir, who then best knew her perfect Life Ought to rejoyce, not grieve for your dead Wife.

SYLVIA.

FRAGMENT.

S DAMON thus did 'plaine,
Behold a Cloud (out of the foamie Maine)
'Gan to arrie, and over-looke the Earth,

Scorning the Sea (from whence it took its birth) As dull and pond'rous, still it mounts up higher With azure Wings, as if it meant t'aspire, Spight of commanding Natures free Confent, To place 'bove Ayr the watry Element; Whose vain ambition, from his calld Sphear. When nimble Fire, the chiefe and fupreme Peere Of Elements, beheld; his fervent Ire Increal'd his furie, adding Fire to Fire, Making him hotter than the eighth degree, Which is prescrib'd him by Philosophie, And calling to his accident, the Heat That by him fate upon a brazen Seat: Which flam'd like Ætna, when Typheus breath Threatens to blow up the Sicilian earth. He bad him quell that over daring Foe, Who still made hast to his own overthrow. Heat strait obayd; and wrapping up in Smoke His horrid Flames, a speedy passage took

Into the fierie Regions, and with force
Of rayes more ardent than the Sun's bright Horse
When they ore-turn'd their Masters purple Carr,
And drownd in Po, the ventrous Waggoner,
Drew up the willing Cloud, that striv'd to slie,
With Icarus to its owne Tragedie.
Just as a Load-starre, whose attracting force
Does cause the Iron leave its native Course,
And mount to it; so did Heats pow'rfull might Inforce the following Cloud ill it had quite Pass'd the first Kingdome, and was upward gone
Into the pure Ayrs middle Region;
Then back with speed, the Heat 'gan homeward fare

And left the Cloud to th' mercy of the Ayre; Whose subtle bodie being light and drie, Could not indure the Clouds moist qualitie. (Clouds, and all heavie Meteors, Rain, and Snow, Haile, and the like, are Bodies mixt, that grow Out of the Earth, and watry Element, Which by their nature pond'rous, still are bent Down to the Center, but the Ayre and Fire Of more pure fubflance, feek to force them higher Towards the Sphear, that in their downfall thence They may triumph, and shew their Eminence Over those duller bodies; but the natures Of these two grosse, yet fully simple Creatures Will not permit ascension, they attract Therefore these Meteors upwards, which compact Of humid Vapours, needs must seek to bow Downwards again): Our Cloud then which was now

Left by its hot Conductor, straight was cast By the inraged Ayr with greater hast, To kisse the Center (than a Parthian Bow Can shoot an Arrow, or a Morter throw Deathful Granado's): in its way it strook Upon the Firmament, and there b'ing broke, Its wat'ry substance did obscure the Plaine And gawdie Heaven with Clouds, which fought again

To joyn in one, and fill the buxome Ayre,
Just as you've seen a Painter on a faire
White Table drop some little spots of Black,
Which running here and there, at length does make
One Colour in the Grownd-work; or as when
Two num'rous Hosts of wel-resolved men
Meet in the Field, and with the murd'rous Smoak
Of their Death-sending Muskets, strive to choak
Their bloody facts from view of lightsome day,
The Sulphure slying many a sev'rall way,
At last does meet, and dim the Christall Sky:
So did this Cloud, now many, by and by
One Cloud agen; which when the Rose-cheek'd
Sun

(Who had but halfe his daily labour run) Saw from his fhining Chariot, on hee fpeeds, Driving amain his Nectar glutted Steeds Through the dark Welkin, now he gins to call On Pirois, now on Æthon, then lets fall His angry Whip upon their fweaty backs. Now pullsthe Raines hard, which again he flacks, That they might have more free and open Course T'expell the Cloud, which scorning the Suns force, With pitchie mists did so obscure his light, That day feem'd turn'd into Cimmerian Night. Then straight the Cloud out of its watrie Store Showr'd as if godly Pyrrhus age once more Had been approaching, when blew Proteus drave His flocks to see the Mountains. Fishes clave Unto the Elmes, before a noted feat For harmlesse Turtles. All the Winds did meet In hofule opposition; Auster fought With Lybs, and he with Boreas, who from out His rapid throat cast gusts, and did display His wings as wide, as when Orythia Was by him ravisht: Thunder from the Skie Like to lowd musick, made a Harmonie:

With the Winds whiftling shrilnesse. Seas did roare Rifing in frothie Mountaines, that the Shore Trembled for feare, left the impetuous Waves Should passe their Limits, and become the Graves To the adjoyning Meadows. And our Swaine Damon, who erft in Tears began to plaine His Kala's loffe, now let that falt dew fall, To folemnize his poor Flocks Funerall. For loe, big-swelling with the late-falne Raine Tyber broke ore his Banks, and ran amaine Into the Meadowes, where our Shepheards kept Their Woolly Charge, which presently was swept Down by the greedy River, as wee fee A Towne beleagur'd by its Enemie. When by an on-flaught 'tis furpriz'd and tane, Both old and young are by the Martiall Traine Of the Victorious Souldiers murdred: fo Dealt the inraged River, to and fro It ran, and bore down all, the tender Lambs That then were fucking of their milkie Dams, Ere they could waile their deaths with one fad bleat.

Were swallow'd up, yet hanging on the Teat Nor did the Flocks horn'd-Leaders brazen Bell Serve him for ought, unlesse to ring a knell To the Folds drowning, 'twas in vain to strive, For the poor Shepheards now to fave alive Themselves was all their studie; to a Wood. Whose top had long a mark to Sea-men stood, They trembling fled, when straight the Cloudy Skie 'Gan to cleer up, and Phæbus lightfomely Agen to shine; the Muses of this Grove To chaunt their fylvan Madrigalls, and move The Stones to listen, and the loftie Trees To bow their dewie heads: the busie Bees Leaving the hollow Oaks which the late Rain Had forc'd 'em enter, now began again Their little thighs with juyce of Thyme to fill; But the amazed Shepheards trembling full,

Could scarce give credit to their wondring eyes, (Such pow'r has seare if throughly it surprize Our soule and sences) they beheld the Wood As't had been water, thought each plash a flood, And every drop that from the boughs did fall They thought a tear shed for their Funerall. In this amazement standing; to their sight An object was presented, naked quite, Save that her snowie Smock did compasse in Its white embraces, her far whiter Skin. They saw bound to an Oak so rare a Creature As seem'd to be the work on which old Nature Had spent her best Materialls.

Not Cytherea, when shee naked rose
From the Seas wat'ry bosome, did disclose
Halse of her Beauties; nor the nimble Maid,
To whose swift Feet so many Suitors paid
Their heads as tribute, nor the Wood-nymphs
Oueen

When shee was bathing by Asteon seen, Showd like to her; by whom Pigmalion might Have tane a Patterne, and have fram'd a right Modell of Beautie her attractive Haire, Bright as the Sun-beams, drew th' inamour'd Ayr Gently to wast it, and her Pearls of Sight, Though drown'd in Tears, cast forth a glitt'ring light,

That through dark Sorrow shin'd; the winged Boy

Leaving his Mothers Fountains, came t'injoy
Those Christal Wels, whose pure drops could redresse
Sooner than Nectar, hot Loves thirstinesse.
The Naiades, and tripping Fairie Elves
Repin'd to see in their owne Woods, themselves
So farre surpassed in Beautie; and the Crove
Thinking 't had been Sylvanus fairest Love,
Brought thither all his Off-spring, with pretence
To doe his Gods belov'd Nymph reverence.

First did the Thorne most amorously begin To twine about her, yet nere prick'd her skin: Then aged Palmes, and Victor-crowning Bayes Halfe-withered (at her Eyes all-quickning Rayes) Came and renew'd their freshnesse: and the Yew Unkind to wearie Passengers, at view Of her, loft all his poyfon; and the Tree Whence Venus Minion in his Infancie Was by the Wood-nymph taken, did prefume To borrow sweetnesse from her breaths persume; Here did the Cedar meet the stately Pine, And it the Cypresse, seeking to intwine Their bushie tops, which Arbour-wise did run To shade her Face, and robb the am'rous Sun Of his defired Kiffes; all the Wood At view of her, as much amazed flood, As when the Oegran Harpists cunning hand Gave life to Mountains, forc'd Panchaya stand Shaking her Balmie Tresses. Had the deep Sighs shee expir'd not shewd that life did keep In her a happie residence, the Swaines Would have imagin'd that her azure Veines, Her Iv'rie Neck, and fwelling Brests, the rest Of her Dimensions, not to be exprest, T' have been Diana's Statue, there erected To be ador'd; but when they had respected Her fighs, and faw her living as fh' ad been Some Sylvan Goddesse, or the Nymph whose green Scepter commands the Forrests: they ask'd grace For off'ring entrance to that facred place. The bashfull Virgin, from her weeping eyes Shot glitt'ring Rayes hot Loves Incendiaries, Teaching Daies Tapor a more glorious Shine Than Diamonds give to Jet, when they intwine. At them the frozen Waggoner might thaw His Chariot axel'd with congealed Snow; And the flow moving North-star having felt Their temp'rate heat, his Isicles would melt, And being affrighted at the fight of men.

Call'd up the blood into her Cheeks agen Which fear had made depart thence; blushing red, As does Aurora when shee leaves the Bed Of old Tythonuus; faine she would have got Into the Wood, tooke Daphne from the hot Purfuit of lustfull Cynthius: the Oak She oft befought to lend its Bark to cloak Her from their view, but when she saw how vain Her wishes were, shee then began amain To beat her Brefts, and from her radiant eyes To fend a showre, whose drops were of more price Than those which conquer'd Danae: As shee thought With plaints and grievous fighs to have befought The Shepheards to unbind her; from the thick Of the green Wood, came running toward her, quick As fome Numidian Lyon from his Den, (Half-starv'd with hunger) to his prey, three men Three Monsters rather, clad in Weeds of haire, Save that their Legs, and Armes, and Necks all bare, Look'd rougher than their Garments; to the Maid Then bent their cruell steps, who humbly praid The Heavens for pitie; on the Villains went Towards the Oak with a most damn'd intent To ravish her; the Trees that by her stood Began lament; the light Nymphs of the Wood Implor'd the chast Diana to defend Her wretched Votresse; and the Birds did rend The Avr with difmall fcreetches: Phylomell In mourning accents fram'd her voice to tell The Vengeance due to Ravishers: the Fire That burn'd their entrails, blown by foul defire, Made their eyes sparkle, yeelding horrid light Unto their fact, whose blacknesse did affright The blushing Sun, who hid his golden head And feem'd to fuffer an Eclipse through dread Of that dark deed; and now they did begin With facrilegious hands to touch that skin. Which foft as Lydian Silk, did even intice Love there to build his choicest Paradice.

When the inraged Shepheards, who beheld Their monstrous purpose, with stern fury fild, Ran to her fuccour; as a Bear, whose young Is stolne away, or as a Wolfe among A flock of Sheep, when by the Pastors care Hee's hindred of his prey; just so did fare The disappointed Letchers; and with cries Whose hideous found lent thunder to the skies. They rush'd upon the Shepheards, who prepar'd For all incounters, flood upon their guard, And with their hooks, which fometimes us'd to catch The tender Lambs and bleating Ewes, they watch To meet their blows, and strength with strength repel, All ftrook together, yet not one blow fell In vain to th' ground; the sweat and purple blood That trickled from them, dim'd their fights, yet stood The fight in equall ballance, now the Swaines, And then the Wood-men had the odds; their paines Seem'd not to make 'em wearie, these did fight Spur'd on by luft, and these in justice right. Now 'gan they grapple, and with all their force Striv'd to orethrow each other; no remorfe Of their own harms, could move their angrie minds To come to parley: furie when it blinds Our foules, is fuch a passion; not the rage Of hungrie Indian Lyons, when they wage With rav'nous Leopards battell for their prey, Was like to theirs: fierce Beafts and Tygers may Be held as mild; the Brittish Mastisses fight With his couragious Irish opposite; The Dragon arm'd with plates of strongest Male. Against loves Bird; the Sword-fish and the Whale Were models of this Combate, till at length, Might overcame, Vertue gave place to Strength: The Shepheards breathlesse were; their angrie foes Wax'd more couragious, and did feek to close With their half-vanquish'd enemies: as a Steed Who having run with over-hastie speed Most of his Race, does ere it fully end.

Tire: fo the Shepheards who did rashly spend Their spirits at the entrance of the Fray. Ere it was done, had none to spend, yet they With courage held the Fight up, till by force Mastred, they fell, each with a wounded Corse Striking the earth now when they could no more Strike their inhumane foes. The favage Bore That in revenge wrathfull Dictynna fent To ipoile the Chaledonian Continent. When he had drawn the valuant Dardans blood, Could not triumph more; they infulting flood Like to fo many Goshawks ore their prev. Ore the poor Swains, what then could Sylvia, (So hight the Nymph) expect, but present death, Or ravishment? which to prevent, her breath She fought to stop with her gold tramell haire. But when it came into her lips, it there Amoroully hung, fpight of her force, to fuck Myriads of melting kisses; see the luck Heavens had ordain'd to fave her; with her cries And with the late-fought Combats Ecchoing noise, Drawn to the place, arriv'd an armed Knight, Who to avoid the fearfull tempests might. Had tane the Woods for shelter, just as they With barbarous outcries were about to flay The honest Shepheards, whom when he did view In that apparent perill, straight he flew Upon the luftfull butchers, and his Sword Dealt deathfull dole amongst 'em; they afford Him blowes for blowes, and dangerous fight maintaın

Till his strong hand victoriously had slain The fiercest of them; then the other paire, Like to a stone that through the subtle Ayre Flies from a forcing sling, so fast they sled Into the wood; the Shepheards almost dead With wounds and brusses, joyfully did rise To thank their Saviour, who had cast his eyes Up to the Tree where lovely Sylvia stood,

Bound, like the Tyrian Damfell when the flood Sent up a Whale to eat her. This strange sight So full of wonder, filld the courteous Knight With admiration, and defire to know. Both who shee was, and who had us'd her so. And hasting forward to the holy tree, He gently gan to loose her bands; but shee Who in the Idea of her frighted thought ' Saw nothing but her Foes, imagin'd nought But present Rape, gave up her Virgin breath From whence shee had it, and enrich'd foul Death With the most orecious flavour: not the Boy Now turn'd a Flow'r whom Phæbus did destrov With his Sledg-casting; nor Orithia's faire Sister, sweet Procres, whom the name of Ayre Brought to her ruine: nor loves beam-burn'd Love In death appear'd fo amorous. As a Dove Truf'd by a Falcon gently takes the stroke Of Death, fo did shee. The broad spreading Oak Erst proud of its faire Captive, sadly now Began lament, and mournfully to bow His aged head, to kiffe her livelieft Corfe, The Wood-nymphs mournfull plaints did even enforce

The neighb'ring Rocks to weep; our Shepheards tears

Watred the earth: in her fad death, appeares His Kala's losse to Damon, so that hee Wept both for hers, and Kala's Tragedie. But all their woes were nothing to the plight Of forrow seizing on the gentle Knight, When hee beheld her perish, that his griese Made him forget to tender quick rehese Unto her fainting; yet at last he ran Unto a neighb'ring fountaine, and began To catch the glyding water, which did meet His labouring hands, thence leapt into her sweet Though dying face, shee only in a swound, And not quite dead; the saving water sound

Means to recure her, (for 'tis fure the nature Of fuddain traunces, which possesse a Creature Only when Feare does call from every part The lively blood to aid the fainting heart, Agen to vanish, when the blood is call'd By fome quick motion to the parts appall'd For want of it; Shee therefore in this guife Handled, unfeald (forthwith) her death-clof'd eyes. As the transplendent Guider of the Day Obscur'd by clouds, more brightly does display When h' ath orecome them, his all-piercing light, So did the blazing Comets of her fight Dart now more lucid clearnesse, every beame Of it deferving to have been a Theame For all the Poets. Not the Cyprian Rose Or filver Lillie, what can we suppose, Was like her Cheeks? Hyperbolies must needs Fail to expresse that which it selfe exceeds All Metaphors. in them the blushing Red Striv'd to appeare, and back unwilling fled To give that place to the more pow'rfull White: Judge but what fulnesse of sincere delight Rapt the late fearfull Knight when he did fee Her live agen; hee hasted to the tree, And kindly chear'd her tim'rous heart; the Maid Could scarce believe her ears or eyes, which paid Joy a most welcome tribute, to unbind Her cords he hafted, while the mossie rinde Of the broad spreading tree did strive to cleave To her fair skin, as if't had rather leave Its mother Oak than her; beneath the shade Of a thick Fig-tree she before had laid Her light filk garments, which the Shepheards brought

To flie unto her bodie; foon as shee Had put them on, with blushing modestie She thank'd the noble Champion and the Swains, Who for her sake had undergone such pains As merited requitall; but a look
From her fweet felf both Knight and Shepheards took

As a reward fufficient; they would faine
Have ask'd her name, but durft not; how shee came

To be diffrest so; but lest shee should chance
With thought of it to fall into a Trance
Agen, they would not crave 't; She humbly prayed
The Knight and Shepheards, she might be conveyd
By them home to her Fathers house, that stood
Under the covert of that lucklesse Wood
Where shee had run such danger: Straight way they

Leaving the curfed Villaines corps a prey
To meager Wolves, the leavie Grove forfook;
Shee being their Guid, a beaten Path they took
Into a Meadow, where the Fowers did strive
With eager motion, which should first revive
From their late drowning, that they so might meet
With dewie lips the beauteous Virgins seet.

Cætera defunt.

POEMS IN MEMORY OF THOMAS BEEDOME

[Published 1641]

On the death and Poems, of his most deare friend, Master Thomas Beedome. (1).

W HY did thy muse display her eaglets wing, And make a slight at heaven? why did shee

Like to the earely Larke, when she begunne. Glad carolls in the eare o' the liftning Sunne. Till heavens inhabitants did even conspire. To fnatch thee as a chanter to their quire. But glorious Beedome, ere he left the earth, Did give to fame a Monument, a birth. To fuch a living fancy, as in fpight Of fate, shall like a precious ray of light, Dwell bout his urne, where all the muses sit, Wayling the loffe of his emergent wit. And weeping ore his ashes till their eyes. Instead of teares, shed mournfull Elegies. Peneian Daphne, there her armes duplayes, As if the would intombe him in her bayes. And she who Phoebus hot pursuit did shunne. Imbraces the old ashes of his fonne. There a bright troope of Virgins that from farre, Appeare, refembling every one a starre, Drown'd in a fee of pearle, doe fadly rife, From his lov'd urne, each one without their eyes. Wept out, or burning left there, as they'd meant,

Those lights for tapers to his Monument. Where shall we find at such a time a soule. That could in flowing numbers even controule, Arts nimblest currents, and most swiftly glide, Without least noyse, admir'd before espide. So have I feene a gentle streame, with sweet, And fluent motion, foftly hast to meet, Its mother Ocean, and inrich her store, With a more gratefull tribute then before. A thousand violent torrents paid, whose waves, Though lowder, brought lesse musicke to their graves, His life was all one harmony, and in's death, Numerous, and full of fweetnesse was his breath, Expanded like the Swans concluding layes. In lasting accents, that shall speake his prayle, While Feather-footed time does swiftly passe, Or has a fand left in his plenteous glaffe, This is my vote, which to thy Booke shall be

A just applause, to thee an Elegie.

In obitum Lachrymabilem, Thomas Beedome, nuper defuncti, et in præclara ingensi sui Monumenta jam primum edita.(1)

Iccine crideli cecidifti morte peremptus? Siccine in extremos, justus es ire rogos? Et vix ingressus teneros lanuginis annos; Corrus ante diem, blande Bedome, tuum. Ouid iuvat, ut tremulis cecinifii docta Camænis Carmina? Threiciæ digna legenda lyræ? Quidve quod auricomum cinxisset pennula frontem ? Vmbraffetque tuas laurus amica genas; Omnia cum nostri fint hæc monumenta doloris: Quantaque virtus erat, tantus eritque dolor. Sic in Erithreo pretiofam littore concham Cum perdat; Lachrymis prostruit Indus humum Sicque super tumulum plorantia lumina salsis Opprimimus fluviis: noxque fit atra dies; Cur tamen irriguis guttas foluamus ocellis? Curve fluit gemitus noster ab ore citus, Tene per altithroni fequerentur gaudia luctus f Tene per astriferam quæreret unda domum! Non petit affiduos fanctorum manfio planctus: Convenit haud liquidis flamifer ignis aquis.

Non opus interea est tantam deslere ruinam Opprimet et tantum multa ruina virum I nunc magnisicos jactato tyranne triumphos, Mors, et depictis pende trophæa tholis, Quam fragiles ictus contemptibilesque sagittæ Sunt, nec vulneribus lædis ut ante tuis Dulciloquis volutans juvenis super æthera scriptis Vivit in aurato nomen opusque libro. Atque triumphales redimunt sua tempora vitæ; Victor adest mortis, sama perennis erit. Vivit enim certi Immutato pectore amici Nec potuit tumulo nobiliore frui.

Sır,

Have fo long beene in your debt, that I was almost desperate in my selfe of making you paiment, till this fancy by ravishing from you a new Curtesse in its patronage, promised me it would satisfie part of my former engagements to you. Wonder not to see it invade you thus on the sudden: Gratitude is aeriall, and like that Element, nimble in its motion and performance; though I would not have this of mine of a French disposition, to charge hotly and retreat unsortunately: there may appeare something in this, that may maintaine the sield courageously against Envy, nay come off with honour; if you, Sir, please to rest satisfied, that it maiches under your Ensignes, which are the desires of

Hat Earthquake's this? that with fuch fury fhakes
My lofty Turrets from their Base? and makes

My marble pillars totter, as they meant To fink into the Centre? the event Of these strange terrours certainly must be Sad prefaces to th' book of mifery, Which now is opend in me; every page Of which is able to affight the age To heare it read, make Nature mourn and keep My Obit, nay the worlds great Genius weep. How vaine are humane glories? why should men Repine to meet a dissolution, when Even in an inflant, such vast frames as I. Castles, and stateliest marble fabricks die ! Nay Monarchies, fuch as have feen (the light Of the whole world) the Sun rife faire and bright, And fet within their limits, quickly have Had all their greatnesse shrowded in the grave Of that sterne tyrant Destiny, who slings His various stormes on Kingdomes, nay on Kings, Who though they heavens immediate figures be.

Cannot evade this fad fatality:
When like loud thunder violent, or the North,
Its fudden tempest hideously breaks forth,
As't has on me, who have for many yeares
Out-shin'd the state and lustre of my Peeres.
Great Hampton Court, faire Greenwich, Richmond, and

The pleasant None-such; that I seem'd to stand Equall with Loure, or that work of all So much admir'd Spaines coftly Scuriall: Who fince that prince of Prelates. Woolfey, laid My firme foundations, have as Empresse sward O're all the British pallaces, and beene The constant Residence o'th' King and Queene, That with their presence royall, did adorne My well-built Fabrick: As continued Morne Had dwelt about my cheeks, whose every ray Appeard fufficient to create new day Forth of the Chaos; As if t' had begunne Here to doe Homage to the Easterne Sunne. Which never more shall red with blushes rife. To see himselfe out-shin'd by th' orient Eves. Of those pure Constellations: that still went About me, made me feeme a firmament Of moving starres: and unexampled I Was held the feat where Earth's best Deity Iov'd to refide. As I had beene the fumme Of pleafure, the worlds fole Elifeum. Then were the times, when in my infant pride. Great Henry (who my buildings dignified First with that supreme honour) did resort Hither, entituling me his Soveraigne Court. When he his conquering Enfignes did advance. Over the bowels of infulting France: When Turwin trembled at his fierce Alarmes. Where Maximilian his Emperial Armes, The Roman Eagles bravely did display Without dishonour, taking Englands pay. When conquerd Tournay fent his spoiles to adorne My walls for fuch Illustrious trophees borne.
Then who like me was happy when that King
To me did all his mighty triumphs bring.
That Honours owne brow could not boast more
Bayes

More wreathes of Palme, then in those happy dayes Grew to my temples: And when filken peace Had ty'd wars furly rage up; what encrease Of bleffings flow'd about me then? as Thames In its curl'd waves, had fwallowd the foure names Of those sweet Rivers that did once surround Eden, and I had beene that happy ground Pregnant with Aromatick Balme and fpice. The first created, long lost Paradise. Then did the worthies of that famous Age. Make me the constant, the continued stage Where they did act their Revels, Mirth, and Sport, Being the harmlesse Genii of the Court: When tilts and turnaments did to the life Imitate without blood-shed, wars hot strife. Then gentle Love did all his Cupids arme, To wound the Ladies (fuch wounds cause no harme)

And strike the stubborne and more marble hearts O th' gallant Heroes with his flaming Darts. And when that King had run his mortall race. The thronging stars striving to make him place Among their weaker fires: his hopefull fonne Edward (whose vertues all affections wonne) That little Eve of Nature, the Delight O th' Kingdome, by his bloods undoubted right, Wielding this Scepter, did confirme to me The former charter of my Soveraignty. So did his Sifter Mary, though her raigne, (Cause fraught with trouble) scarcely did maintaine Me in my wonted ornaments, when she, Who was the very foule of Majesty, That virgin Oueene, whose unexampled glory. Gives truth to fame, and miracle to story;

In whose pure frame, as in their sphears were set The starres of Tudor and Plantaginet. Eliza, rul'd, then I began to weare A dreffe of Excellence, more rich, more cleare. And full of wonder, then Fames bounty coud Ere clothe her brazen pillars in. I flood The envy of all Nations; then in me All bleffings strived to make an unity. Then from the whole world, I did tribute take Brought into me by that great Neptune. Drake. Who furrow'd up the threatning Oceans face. (And fwift as billows doe each other chace) Purfued the steps of honour through the maine, Rifling the treasures of scarce known New Spain: Whose Mines and Towns he ransackt, and ran on (Big with a noble brave Ambition) Through all opposing dangers, till he hurl'd As twere a girdle bout the spacious world. Then did I groan under the unvallued weight Of fooils cast on me in that Eighty Eight; When that fame huge Armado did invade The British Seas with terrour, and displayd (In forme of a vast Crescent on the flood) Itselfe as if thad beene a tall growne wood: Till our fmall Navy did it selfe advance, (Refolv'd to stand the utmost storme of chance) Against that monstrous Fleet, that even defide Heaven in its infinite ambitious pride. And boldly led on by that Son of Fame. Our valiant Admirall, noble Nottingham, Gave them fierce battell; then in fire did flie Like thunderbolts in lightning from the fkie The deathfull bullets, splitting with their stroak, The knotty ribs of their tough Biscaine Oak: Cracking their Masts, and with their sulphurous breath

Giving their Ships fresh wounds to let in death: Which as they sunk cast forth a purple flood, And drownd in water, drownd the waves with blood.

The waves that by th' forc'd motion wrought so high. As they had meant to hang teares i'th' Suns hot Eye. Who in a maze obfcur'd his golden light, While clouds of imoak transform'd the day to night. The affrighted Mirmaids flockt in sholes to see That diffolution of Mortality. And as it were in pitty did instead Of their false Charms, chant requiems to the dead. The feas blew Sexton, Triton, making graves, Did work to heard he tweat amidst the waves: And Proteus now a constant visage weares Of forrow, shedding pearles in stead of teares. Then what was rich and precious in that Fleet. With it the joyfull Conquerours did greet Me at their home returne from these brave broyles. As I had been the temple where the spoyles Of that renouned fea fight ought to be Hung up as Trophees to white victory: Nor were all these all triumphs that did fall, During this reigne, on me (then bleft White-Hall) A thousand ornaments my rooms did gaine, Fetcht from the richest Cities of proud Spaine. When that same joy of manhood whom his sate Did afterwards render unfortunate. Illustrious Effex with auspicious sailes. Set forth to th' conquest of Herculean Cales. Where great Alcides fixt his pillars, and Writ Non plus ultra to the then knowne Land: That City glorying in the Indian ore As low as earth humbled her head before That conquering Earle, while her tall towers and foires

Burnt (as 'twere Martyrs) in those hideous fires
Themselves made for themselves, till their huge frames
Consum'd to ashes in their own bright flames.
Then did I flourish, then my spacious rooms
Were hung with Arras, nay with Persian looms.
Then did my walls drest in rich colours vie
With Roman Pallaces for Imag'ry:

Mosaick paintings (though I'm now forlorne) Did then my coftly gilded roofs adorne. Statues of Parian Marble fuch as might The amorous Premalion invite To laugh at his dull workmanship, did grace My walks and gardens: then in every place The wheat crownd Ceres (with her head unshorne) Freely advanc'd her plenty bearing horne; The most delicious viands in full state Serv'd to my tables in huge antick Plate: While plumpe Lyaus wish green Ivie crownd. Danc'd up to th' eyes in precious wine, a round Through my large Lobbies: then those sons of chine And pith, the Guard carowid black lacks of wine In flead of fingle beare; then did they eat Without controule that emperor of meat, The lufty chine of Beefe; while I did feeme With magazines of plenty full to teeme Without least feare of barrannesse: the spring To me her beauties did as offrings bring, The glorious fummer and rich Autumne paid, Their bleffings as my tribute: while this maid Was my imperial mistriffe winter's breath, Had not the force to freeze my youth to death: Which then like the Arabian yeere was feen, With gorgeous face still flourishing and green. No civil broile or forraigne feare did fright Me from my daily practife of delight; Iustice was then return'd agen to earth, Those bliffefull times gave no finister birth To fowle oppressions; then within my frame Nere had been heard that so detested name Of a Monopoly; nor by Patent made Lawfull, were injuries to every trade: But each one then did under his own vine. Eat his bread freely and caroufe his wine; Which knew no Medium, then 'twixt those extreams Of white and claret; then the common theams, Of the glad people were full of joy and praise,

Of those superlatively happy dayes. There were no clamors heard within my gates. Of men miustly rob'd of their estates By powerfull Favourites: no faction then Reignd, leffe an emulation amongst men Who should doe worthiest things. As in a hive The Bees fmall pallace, where each one does strive Which shall most honey to the store-house bring. Deflouring those chaste Virgins of the spring The azure violets, that hang downe their heads. While they fuck all their sweetnesse from their beds: With which their thighes fulfil'd, they nimbly flie (Carrying that victim of their industry) Into the common dwelling, where they fing Triumphant peans to their avrey King: So 'twas in me, each striv'd who should excell Others in acting the States bufineffe well, Who could most frequent by th' worlds eve be feen Ready in fervice to that virgin Oueene. No tumults then, attempted were by th' rude And many headed beaft, the Multitude: (To whom the present times seeme ever worst, Praising the past they never knew) they durst Not then in mutinous troops have past by me. As if they meant to fright bright Majesty Out of my bosome; then there was no strife Ith' Common-wealth about religion rife. But all was peace and justice, which then grew Together like the Gemini. I knew No gawdy fashions then from giddy France Brought hither fince to be the Courts mischance. Sick of that forraigne pride, whose various dresse Has ushered in effeminate wantonnesse. The Lords then in their native habit went, Which was as comely as magnificent. The Ladies then their genuine beauties ware. Ignorant of the imposture of false haire: Nor did they their owne red and white attaint With that foule treason against Nature, paint:

But each one striv'd with cunning art to finde New wayes of vertue to adorne their mind. Such was my fate, so temperate and just, It ne'r knew not, nor convers'd with luft. Nor did my glories, when that virgins breath Expiring feemd to bring the Island death, End or diminish. A new starre brake forth. As bright and quickning from the boifterous North. Darting its cheerfull influence through my rooms. Which did from mournfull folitary tombs Refume their pristing lustre: when great Iames Had past the Twede to view imperial Thames. Whole fwans, in stead of their own dirgies sing Triumphant welcomes to the long wish King. Whose each look was a starre, and every smile The Sun that quickned, with new life, this Isle. This Iames who the two Kingdomes did unite. As happy Henry the red rose and white: This Iames the darling and delight of fate, Borne for the Solomon oth' British State. This king of more then Kingdoms, all mens hearts: Monarch of letters, Emperour of arts: When he his happy peacefull reigne begunne, What plenteous streames of joy and blisse did runne Through all my veines! what a full through refort Did beautifie each corner of my Court! When armes, as uselesse, were hung up, no jarre Was heard, no notife of home or forraigne warre. The Muses then did florish, and upon My pleasant mounts planted their Helicon. Then that great wonder of the knowing age, Whose very name ments the amplest page In Fames faire book, admired Iohnson stood Up to the chin in the Pierian flood Ouaffing crownd bowles of Nectar, with his bayes Growing about his temples; chanting layes, Such as were fit for fuch a facred Eare As his majestick Masters was; to heare, Whom he so oft pleased with (those mighty tasks

Of wit and judgement) his well laboured Masks. Then those two thunderbolts of lively wit Beaumont and Fletcher gloriously did sit Ruling the Theater, and with their cleane Conceptions beautifying the Comick Scene. And noble Donne (borne to more facred use) Exprest his heavenly raptures: As the juice Of the Hydlean roles did distill Through the Alembeck of his nectard quill. Chapman like Homer in me often reads His Oddises, and losty Iliads. That I did rather then appeare to be The worlds best furnished learnedst Academy. Then the Kings pallace: who when fatall fire In its malicious fury did conforme To ruine part of my faire buildings: He Great Tames renewd with State and Maiestv. Like to himselfe, that goodly Fabrick, which Is for maternalls, as invention rich: On polished marble pillars, which shall stand To fpeak his fame, while this renowned Land. Free from all the invalion of all forraigne harmes. Is walld about with Oceans water armes. For which faire ornament I must bestow My gratitude on worthy Inigo. Whose skill in Fabrick did direct each part Of that excelling frame with powerfull art. Yet should I filent be, the very stones. So quaintly laid, will speak the praise of lones, But now the fands of his full glaffe being run. In the Imperiall chayre his royall Son (Whom heaven protect, and with a prosperous reign Grant to rule this faire Island, and maintaine It in tranquillity and happy peace, To Justice and Religions full encrease) Brave Charles succeeded. Then my joyes renewd. As Eagles their old feathers being mewd. I with his vigorous presence warmd, grew yong. My witherd frame appearing farre more strong

Then at its first foundations; mirth and sports
Like fayries tripping through my happy Courts.
When Englands Charles the great in me was seene,
To give a gracious welcome to his Queene,
That flower of France, her sexes fairest pride,
Maria Henrietta his deare Bride,
Who with a numerous progeny has blest
The British Kingdom; which in peace and rest
Was pregnant with selectly, untill
Like torrents falling from some losty hill,
Or like some sudden storme out of a cloud
Mischief came thundering from the North so loud,
As 'twould have wakend death; thence thence did rise

Those teares which dwell in seas about mine eves. Then 'gan my stately world admired head To shrink, when Charles a puissant Army led Into the field, with resolution hot. To tame the daring valour of the Scot: Who urg'd (it feemd) by fome Imagind wrong, Their confidence being as their force was strong. Came marching hitherwards: but yet white peace By its all powerfull goodnesse caused to cease, Those so lamented discords; and did bring In fafety to me, home my much lov'd King: And as a Taper which ere it expires, Collects together, its concluding fires; As 'twere to light it felfe to death, difplayes Ere it extinguishes a sudden blase: More flaming glorious than it's perfect fhine Could ere expand; fo did those beames of mine Break forth, extending a gay fickly light. And now's obvolv'd in an ere-lasting night: Since Charls his absence; as you've seen the avre. Which yesterday was so serene and faire: Heaven's forehead wore no wrinkles, curle its brow Into a thousand dusky furrows now: So tis with me, who am enforc'd to shroud My face, which yesterday contemnd the cloud:

That now obscures it; timorous to see That which encreases still my misery. Where are those beauties now from whose each eye. Flew winged flames of love and majesty, That trope of Ladies, who so oft did gild My stately roomes with their own looks, which fild All my Dimensions with rays pure and bright As was in Paradife, the worlds first light? Vanish'd like shadowes, they no more appeare, The Sun being fet; death now inhabits here, And a continued dulnesse, now instead Of those fost measures which so oft were led Over my spacious floores there does intrude Its meager felfe, that nothing folitude: In stead of Musick, such as by the Spheares, And tunefull Orbs is breathd to enchant all Eares: Vpon my Turrets nightly there does howle, The most prodigious and portentous Owle: Nothing but feare and terrour in me dwels, Such as is resident in those dark cels. Where nought but death raigns; what contagious

Of mine committed, 'gainst Great Charls has bin The cause of his long absence, I am sure I'm in my innocence as cleare and pure. As in my infancy: why then should he Inflict upon me, this fad destiny? Why should I languish like a faire young bride, Thus defolate, being causelestly deni'd The comfort of my spouse, who now in arms, Exposd is to the dangerous alarms Of a rude civill-warre, which if a prayer Has power to qualifie; Ile fill the ayre With Orifons, as zealous as my faith, Wit, or religion; nay invention hath Forc'd to produce: may these Domestick broyles, Like morning dew dry up, without those spoyles. Of Kingdoms fire, and bloodshed: May there be 'Twixt King and Subject fuch a Sympathy,

As 'twixt the foule and body, as each part
By strickt relation beares to th' head and heart.
May the King love his subjects, they obey
His iust behests, till his great Empires sway,
Be fixt and lasting in his name and blood,
While this faire Island overlooks the flood.
Showres of continued blessings softly fall
Vpon him, that the wishes of White-Hall
May prove true and prophetick: who must mourn
In widdow'd sadnesse, till best Charles return.

On the Death of the Right Honourable Francis Earle of Bedford.

ELIGIE.

[7 Hat apparition's this? who is't that weares About him wrapt a Christall shrowd of tears: Who is't that in deaths mantion breathlesse lies In flead of tapers, having griefe fwolne eyes, Stuck round about his Hearfe, what an amafe Begot by griefe and wonder, here displayes Sorrow in's blackest Ensignes; as if all Mankind intomb'd were in this funerall: My admiration leaves me now each breath. Sighes in fad accents, glorious Bedfords death. The Iron Souldier that 'th rage of warre Nere wept, when all his body was one scarre: Nor figh'd at groanes of Infants, now does keep His Obit, and, like a foft Virgin, weep: The Courtier whom religion scarce would win, Ere to diffuse a drop for his loose sin: Now unconstrain'd part in this forrow beares, And weares no other Iewels, but his teares, Wrapt in fad Cyprisse, misseltoe, and yewe: Their Daphne layd aside the noble crue Of Phebus Priests lament him; till their cries Turne all to Epicedes and Elegies: Nay in this fad distemper of the State, When most mens softnesse varies into hate,

All now contend in mourning to be chiefe,
And know no other passion but their griefe:
He whose Illustrious vertues with his blood
Ioynd, did intitle him both great and good:
Who with a modest sweetnesse striv'd to win
All mens affections, as if there had bin
In his pure essence multiplyed, every part
Of true nobility fixing in his heart;
Which seemed the spheare where honour did reside

Without the least formality or pride.

Not like those curious great ones, who create
Factions and strange distractions in the state,
Who by malignant Councels strive to bring
Distempers on the Kingdom and the King.
Who though their violent Councels overwhelm
The vessell strive to be advanc'd to th' helme.
Like the Suns daring off-spring, nere content
Till they've atchived the Chariots government;
Which when their feeble forces cannot guide
Like him they boast in great attempts to 've di'de:

No he was wife, and from ambition cleane. Esteemd the truest safety in the meane: His actions being temperate and free From crime, except too much humanity. Who shall like Bedford now, instruct the age Both by example, and the patronage Of true religious piety, how to be Fruitfull in works of publike charity: Who with a noble and ambitious zeale. To encrease the glory of the Common-weale; Did those two works of wonder (which shall stand To fpeak his fame in after times to th' land;) Built Covent-Garden and (that spaceous plaine) The Fens his cost and industry did gaine, From the furrounding waters. where to show What a devotion his Intents did owe To heaven, (left men its worship should neglect,)

In each a Church his bounty did erect: (1) Such was his life, it never did enforce
The great mans envie, or the meaners curfe.
And now his effence by that mortall warre,
'Gainst nature deaths translated to a starre:
His Name shall live, while never dying verse
Has power to hang fresh glories ore his hearse
Which shall extoll and dignishe his Name
Among the Noblest Heroes, which old Fame,
Has in its lasting Chronicles inrold,
In characters of rust contemning gold:
Till to perpetuat Bedfords mented glory,
He be his houses, nay this Nations story.

ELEGIE.

Hat reverend ghost is this which to my view. Prefents the shape of noble Montague: As if 'twould beckon me to 's herfe, to come And fing his honoured Epicedium: I doe obey thy fummons, nay and boast The glory cast on me by thee faire ghost. Which I perceive now, to be truly he Who living bore the stile and dignity Of Earle of Manchester, and for the weale, O th' Kingdom fat long time Lord-Privie-Seale. He who when living truths example flood. To teach great men how to be great and good: Nay to be wife and learnd to act each part, Of their lives scene with vertue and with art. Which he made vertues handmaid, and with skill Manag'd his greatnesse without greatnesse ill: Who is't that has not in the faire pursute, Of honour read the name of Montacute, That boasts it selfe derivitive to be, From those great ancient Earls of Salisbury, That did our English glories so advance, In all our Conquests over vanquishd France: From whence this Earls descended, who did draw Conscience with silken changes to kisse the Law:

All whose great Offices to his lasting grace. He passed exalted from Recorders place, To be th' Kings Serjeant, who did then prefer Him first chiefe Iustice, then Lord Treasurer; And after by his gracious free confent, Confirmd hun of his Councell prefident. Hence knowing his integrity and zeale To Iustice, made him last Lord-Privie-Seale. Can he then fall unpitied, and not have A thousand fluent eyes to wash his grave: Those men must mourn him surely who did by His Iudgements gaine long banishd equity: As if divine Astrea at his birth, Had flown on Turtles wings back to the earth: Her own just precepts freely to impart To him, and multiply them in his heart. And now he is immortall; loe from far. Me thinks I see the aged Manchester, Shine a new starre in heaven, and with his bright And gilt refluction, beautifie the light; Where he shall live for ever, and be read Here in his works of piety, though dead His mortall frame be, yet his noble name Shall live eternizd, by the tongue of fame, And while the world lasts, his Al-Mondo shall Stand candidate for honour, even with all The works of learned Writers, and his prayle Be by time's hand adornd with wreaths of bayes. Thus vertue can secure men dead, and give Life to their memories which shall ever live.

On the Noble, and much to be lamented Mrs. Anne Kirk, wife to Mr. Geo. Kirk, Gent. of the Robes, and of his Majesties Bed-Chamber, who was unfortunately drowned passing London Bridge, Iuly 6. 1641.

an Anniversary.

ELEGY I.

Hat rumor's this, that on the tongue of fame Fhes like a prodigy? as if it came To fright the Genius of the world with feares, Nay change its moving effence into teares: Now, now irrevocably flies the found Her fexes pride; illustrious Kirk is drownd. See how bright troops of virgins, who from farre Appeare, refembling every one a starre Drownd in a sea of pearle, doe sadly rise From her lov'd urne, each one without their eyes, Wept out, or there lest burning as they'd lent Those lights for tapers to her monument. See how the Matrons lay their tires aside, And only in their sorrow take a pride,

Their forrow which now beautifully weares, In flead of diamonds, carcanets of teares. Where shall we find a frame so fully grac't With vertues in so rich a body plac't? That it was truly held the unmatchd shrine Of humane beauties mingled with divine: As if the heavens and nature did agree, In her to fix the greatest sympathy Could be between them; what was faire and good. Inclusive possibly in flesh and blood. Who with her gentle 'haviour and deport. Did gaine the love, not envie, of the Court. And yet she fell untimely, like a rose, Which in the morning fweetly does disclose Its purple beauties, till the winds in love Doe with their frequent boisterous kisses move Its fragrant leaves fo rudely, that ere night They witherd fall; so she did, the delight Of womanhood and vertue; in whose grave Lie more than ere mortality shall have. Agen to boaft, whose glories shall (when all Her fexes Legends unapochryphall For truth and beauty) in fames book be writ, As a large preface fix 1th' front of 1t. That when posterity reads the rape has bin Acted by death on this bright Cherubin, The virgins may her annuall Obit keep, And big with noble emulation, weep To understand their fexes richest store Confum'd on her: Nature's become too poore To frame her equall beauty, or display Such art and wonder in fucceeding clay. And though this Ladie fell, the fpoile of fate, Who with too rigorous hafte did antedate Her day of deftiny, nothing could be found Cruell enough to give that desperate wound, But the false waves, who as they meant to inshrine Her (whom they took for fea borne Ericine) In watry armes, officiously did skip

With fluent motion from each lip to lip,
Till being enamourd on her balmy breath,
(Cruell in love) they kist her even to death:
And viewing then no more life to remaine,
Like Crocodiles they wept ore her they'd slaine.

ELIGY II.

"He year's revolv'd, and now once more is come The day in which she suffered martyrdome. And 'gainst the usuall custome did expire In water, holily as those the fire Did fanctifie for heaven, who us'd to take Delight to runne to the flame bearing stake. Had she like them beene to've received her death. Ere the weak fire by the winds pregnant breath Could have beene blown into a flame, our eyes Should have preuented tyrant deaths furprise, And let fall fuch a huge contracted teare, Able to quench fires element in its spheare. This was the day, when that same subtle thiefe Fate slole earths comfort hence, and cast a griefe Perpetuall as her virtues, ore the face Oth mournfull world, which can afford no place For mirth or sport, till celebrated be The annual requiems to Kirks memory: Which grows more precious, like rich mighty wine By being long kept; or reliques in a shrine Preferve as facred, which inviolate hold

The Charter of their fame though nere fo old. With what a ferious griefe doe men relate Losses in their particular Estate; The toyling husbandman will many years After rehearse unto his rustick Peers His past misfortune, when the Somers heat Did blast his fruit, or mildews hop'd for wheat. The greedy Merchant, if he doe fustaine A loffe by shipwrack in the flattering maine, Sighes at its memory; which does full renew His wealth then drownd to his yext fancies view. And must wee not lament, are we not bound Upon the day when glorious Kirk was drownd, When natures fweetest fruit did blasted fall, To folemnize with teares her funerall: Yes to diffuse a deluge, that as shee By water met her pitied destiny, That element to expiate its black crime May spend its moisture on her dust, till time Dissolve; and we translated to the skies, (Where teares are wip't away from all mens eyes) Exalted to her fellowship may be Her bleft companions ith' felicity She with the Saints possesses; but till then Her losse must be the griefe of all good men.
